SEPTEMBER.

The Opening of the Dramatic Season.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY MATT McARNO.

Give a welcome to royal September!
A welcome that's warm and emphatic,
For he comes like a boon to each member
Of the noble profession dramatic.
Here's an end to the Summer's long trouble,
And a respite to landlords who've trusted;
I suppose it's because Fame's a bubble,
That its claimants so often are "busted."

But now comes a season of plenty,
Which poverty's tangle unravels,
The season when fifteen or twenty
New companies start out on their travels,
And all the old stand-bys make levies,
And bid with an easy facility
For "leading men," "walking gents," "heavies,"
And so down to the "general utility."

And the ladies who during the Summer
Have been driven to straits most alarming,
Whose faces were longer and glummer
Than is proper in creatures so charming,
See a chance to replenish their coffers,
And of winning new laurels and raiment,
And they gladly embrace the fine offers
Of permanent places and payment.

The evenings are cooler and longer
Than when Augus was sultry and sunny,
The demand for amusement grows stronger,
And all classes are freer with money.
A hundred new plays are projected;
But long ere the season declineth
Full ninety, from being rejected,
Will have "gone where the woodbine twineth."

There's an odor of paint and of varnish,
A click of the saw and the hammer,
While the furnishers gather to garnish
Each place that is wont to enamor
The populace during the season.
'Tis a month that we gladly remember,
And that is the rhyme and the reason
For this tribute to royal September.

ROSE:

THE SPLENDORS AND MISERIES

OF

THEATRICAL LIFE.

Translated for The New York Clipper from the French of Edouard Cadol.

CHAPTER III—CONTINUED.

Quitting the manager, George stumbled upon one of those excellent friends whose name is known to no one, and who imposes upon you fastidious familiarity.

"Ah! my dear fellow, this is charming, upon my word. Here is a piece putting to rest operettas and sermons on adultery, with which we are deluged. It is, indeed, charming. Not a line, not a word, were I in your place, would I cut out; it is a hit—and I would be no friend of yours to conceal it from you."

The prompter's bell delivered the poor author from these enervating congratulations, disheartening him while sustaining his patience. With parched lips, weary limbs and a beating pulse, his hands clenching the lining of his pantaloon pockets, he witnessed the "behind the scenes" evacuated with inexpressible relief. Finally the three taps were again given. On the stage, at least, they would find their occupation.

The leading comedian, on the point of appearing upon the boards, seized the young man by the hand. "Don't fret yourself," said he; "it will retrieve itself."

"Retrieve itself," murmured George. "What needs it to retrieve itself? Does it not run smooth? Is there a chance of failure?" And his heart leaped to his throat.

The second act produced a deal of effect. Juliette was interrupted in a fine passage by an outburst of applause; bravo drowned her words. Still the claque—and it ever acts thus—doing its utmost at the finale, provoked several "hushes," slightly militating against the good impression made on the public.

Nevertheless, upon lowering of the curtain, George gained fresh vigor. He believed he held a winning hand. The third act, it was, finding the greatest favor at rehearsals. It terminated in a striking situation, wherein Juliette, experiencing the consequences of her fault, exclaims to her husband: "Be my judge!" A call before the curtain after its triumphant descent was predicted—most certain. Well! and what then? The fourth act? It merely lasted ten minutes—there could be no danger!

Recovered from his anxieties, George resumed that slightly haughty air of satisfaction, of benevolent command, so fascinating to some, so distasteful to a greater number. He passed the entr'acte in the greenroom, indulging in a cigarette, despite of objections from the firemen. After the bravo of the second act, he soared above regulations!

"Come, my children," said he at the moment of continuing the battle; "let us warm up for the third act and we conquer!"

Contrary to expectation, this third act was coolly received. The scenes upon which, from the raising of the curtain, it had been admitted, depended the success of the entire piece would have escaped notice, had it not been for the leader of the claque, who, after notes taken and instructions received, endeavored to arouse enthusiasm. Four or five times he was suffered so to do. But the artists and the author labored under a disappointment. In place of hearty and well-sustained bravos, subsiding into murmurs of sympathetic voices, they were harsh and petulant like beats of a drum, which, commencing abruptly, terminate in a similar manner, leaving behind them an oppressive silence, a shilling sympathy.

During Juliette's great scene the audience appeared to warm up slightly; but the claque, desirous of traveling too fast, were rebuked by several spectators disgusted at inordinate zealousness. The claque, bent upon accomplishment of their purpose, redoubled their efforts, adding the "approbative murmur," stamping with boots and canes, while exclaiming "Bravo! excellent!" after the manner of gentlemen, so earnestly that they were suffered thus to show themselves molested.

"Weak, weak, this third act," quoth Benjamin, drawing Lamie into the neighboring ice-cream saloon.

"There are sparkling bits in it," responded the latter with that diplomatic indulgence permitting assumption of the rôle of a connoisseur while crushing out a comrade.

"Sparkling bits, I admit," replied the good-natured little man; "some witticisms, not worth two sous a week hence."

"Yes!"

And they reveled to the fullness of their hearts. Called out, at lowering of the curtain, Juliette hesitated. Still, as the public reinforced, through respect to a female, the stipendiary applauders, she decided upon complying with it. Upon the stage a frown was upon her brow. Encountering George, she intentionally turned aside her head. Her entire demeanor, moreover, assumed towards him a mortifying circumspection. None being willing to be regarded as the cause of the defeat of entire, the entire crew shifts the burden upon the author's shoulders. It was all the fault of that individual, disdaining counsel, despising advice. He had been oftentimes told—what? Everything! Moreover, how annoying proves his unreasonableness!

George was livid and shocked at the malicious isolation in which everyone left him. And the fourth act? How will it be received? Possibly, it was a good idea of Flourquinet in suggesting a conference to cut down the scene before the last. Alas! time did not admit of it.

Upon commencement of the fourth act the unfortunate author's brain was on fire. His blood mounted to his temples. The slightest noise—the opening of a door, the creaking of a groove—suggested to him the idea of a hiss.

A titter from the audience appeared to him a murmur of pitiful, ironical compassion. A pause of the actors seemed to him evidence that the piece would not terminate without a hope of a finish. Perceiving, through an aperture in the scenery, the Musard family leave their box, he accepted their action as evidence that the audience, wearied and in vexation, were about vacating their places, disdaining even to condemn his work formally.

An oftentimes occurs, he had passed to the opposite extreme. The fourth act was listened to to its end, and certain effects were unexpectedly produced by overlooked points. That which Flourquinet had adjudged prolongation glided along smoothly; in fine, a dropping of the curtain, came general applause, without protest of any kind. More than that, when the stage-manager presented himself to name the author, he was received by numerous voices exclaiming, in advance of the claque, "Bravo! Excellent!" Better still, the cry of "All, all!" arose unopposed, and the performers in "Celemine's Granddaughter" received a warm ovation at the hands of the audience.

Nevertheless, neither one nor the other, neither the actors nor the spectators—in fine, none—were deceived by these plaudits.

"A spectacular sensation!" quoth the machinists.

"An actors' success!" ejaculated Juliette.

In a word, a failure! The terrible, crushing, desolating mid-affect, leaving the author indifferent as to whom is to be awarded the victory.

Rose, remaining the last spectator in the house, was divided between a melancholy stupefaction and a hidden anger. To her mind, it was a masterpiece, and its author the first dramatist of his day. One only, in her eyes, might be placed above him—Emile Augier, and no other! Consequently, why this coldness throughout the audience? To account for it she recognized two causes. In the first place, an unsatisfactory representation; Juliette had performed badly, and, moreover, she was no longer of an age to assume such a character. In the next place, the malicious tendency of an audience composed in a measure of rivals. Furthermore, the claque had operated indiscreetly.

Thoroughly a novice at the theatre, the young girl failed to perceive that she had epitomized in her reflections everything the author's friends, placed in a like predicament, would say and resay in his defense, inasmuch as the world is worldly-minded, and the human race, expelled from the terrestrial paradise, has succeeded in producing individuals concocting rigmaroles for the amusement of their contemporaries; not that they always succeed, for their readers, far from taking intent into consideration, readily make merry over great pretensions at the author's expense.

Wounded to the very quick, Rose, correctly calculating, it is to be admitted, that a second representation would prove an enthusiastic triumph, desired to be present at it. Leaving her box, she gained the door communicating with the stage, with the aim of securing a place from the stage-manager, who should be still at his post.

Behind the scenes groups were discussing, with a consternation not wholly exclusive of malice, the unsatisfactory result of the evening's performance.

"I do not understand you," said she. "I did not leave the front, and I assure you that the effect was excellent. I assure you, moreover, that the piece is a strong production, which on to-morrow night will double its effect. And I assure you, furthermore, that, at the time of the call before the curtain, Sarcey, standing before the orchestra, applauded with all his energies."

"All that, doubtless, goes for something; still—still——"

Actors have a scent of success, and, with greater exactitude, they said:

"It is the failure of an actress."

Rose learned that the stage-manager was closeted with Flourquinet in Juliette's dressing-room, where was being discussed the necessity for a conference on the morrow, with a view of cutting down the first act, as well as the third, and of rearranging certain scenic movements.

The young woman resolved to await the termination of the debate, and, pained at her comrades' expressions, moved towards the stage-manager's office. The door was half open; those entering or emerging threatened to jostle against the girl in the obscurity; she conceived it to be no indiscretion to enter. At her first step inside she perceived a man, leaning with his elbows upon the table, his face covered by his hands, motionless, silent; it was George. She recognized him. There was he, wearied, troubled, and, perchance, ill! From time to time, a movement of his shoulders denoted a nervous crisis. —Doubtless, reaction from the evening's excitement. Tremulous herself, she made a movement, the noise of which was heard by George. Abruptly he raised his head and gazed upon her anxiously. His eyes were red and humid; two tears trickled down his cheeks.

"Ah!" exclaimed Rose, "you are weeping!"

George drew himself upright and extended his hand with a sorrowful smile:

"My nervous system is shaken," replied he. "These four hours have been fatal to me, and for what a result!"

Rose endeavored to console him.

"Ah!" quoth he, "no one better than I knows what to think of it. Did a doubt remain me at the most, see how they have abandoned me. Where was all of those overwhelming me in the morning with sycophantic friendship? Even to Philippin, all have deserted me. Luck turns against me; they shun me, they isolate me, as one stricken by the plague. It is a fearful trade, this of ours, mademoiselle; still, it is not the first time that I have seen with my own eyes the odium of misfortune, and the uncharitableness of society. While I shed tear-drops, two thousand men rub their hands and gloat in mockery of me."

There was in his words, according to Rose's opinion, naught save the exaggeration of a perturbed mind.

"However," he continued with bitterness, "you perceive the condition to which I am reduced. I am awaiting the decision of the manager and stage-manager as to amputations to be performed on the morrow."

"And will you consent to it?" asked Rose indignantly. "Will you permit these people, comprehending it not, to lay hands upon your piece? Oh! I implore you, do not surrender yourself in that manner. Your comedy is a masterpiece, and if it has not met with the success it deserves, it is simply on account of bad acting from beginning to end. For your own sake, sir, suffer it not to be touched nor in anywise deranged. No one has capacity so to do; let it be done, it will be treason to the public, and worse treason to yourself. It must not be done. And if your sympathy for me amounts to aught, I ask, as a favor, that you repel the slightest mutilation."

The young girl's animation, the determination by her exhibited, resolved instantaneously the unhappy man's energy. Anew he tendered her his hand and gazed upon her countenance fixedly.

"You, then, care for me?" he inquired in a troubled voice.

She drooped her eyes, and George, drawing her gently towards him, added in a low tone:

"You love me, Rose?"

Some moments afterwards Philippin, followed by Flourquinet, arrived at the office of the stage-manager, where they remained in waiting orders from the management. They found George alone, his countenance calm, and a cigarette between his lips.

"My dear fellow," said Philippin with a glance towards Flourquinet, "there are three cuttings to make, three only. You will recognize them yourself; and, moreover, during an hour of rehearsal to-morrow everything will be arranged without troubling you to come hither. Is it understood?"

George looked upon both from a pinnacle not permitting him to remain in listlessness.

"Not a traitorous word," he said, "not a punctuation point! And should you desire to place me under obligations, return my piece. I will cause it to be performed elsewhere, and particularly in a different manner!"

Whereupon, forcing his hat upon his head, he saluted them with a solitary word:

"Good-night!"

Philippin, up to that point enchanted at the insignificant part devolved upon him, and who, to sustain credit with the manager, had feebly defended the piece, at once perceived the disgrace his embassy had entailed upon him.

"In fact," stammered he, "perhaps he may be right."

Then, darting through the corridor, he ran after George, whom he overtook in the Passage Jouffroy, by this time deserted by pedestrians.

"You," said La Trefaille to him, "are a good fellow, whose advice and friendship I esteem in everything touching my ordinary course of life. Still, as to my plays, I am annoyed at the necessity of informing you that you do not understand them in the least, and take too much interest in them. It is painful, I repeat, to be compelled to speak in this wise; henceforth act in such a shape as to have it said once for all."

Chilled to the core, Philippin endeavored to master his perturbation. He recoiled upon Flourquinet.

"An ass," interrupted George.

"To allow himself to be circumvented by Juliette."

"A noodle," rejoined the author.

Philippin, abandoning self-justification, made semblance of laughing.

"You are right," quoth he. "To-morrow's success will demonstrate the stupidity of their fears. Still, for all that, neither you nor I have dined; let us eat together, eh?"

"No," responded George; "this evening you dispense me."

With a degree of surprise La Trefailles' stout friend had followed George into the passage, not on the side of the boulevard, but towards the ga's of the Rue Grange-Bateliere. Descending the steps, both reached the sidewalk, when George stopped, tendering his hand.

"Good-night," he said.

"I will not take you home?"

"No."

"Where are you going, then?"

"You bore me, that's the end of it," said the young man. "I tell you you annoy me—there! I have need for being alone. Leave me to myself."

"Be it so," rejoined Philippin. "But to-morrow?"

"In the afternoon."

The two men separated.

Upon the opposite side of the street a coupe was drawn up in an obscure locality. Philippin, upon reaching the Faubourg Montmartre, and casting a sidelong glance, perceived his friend walk to this vehicle and mount into it without speaking to the driver. The man evidently knew where to set him down. Someone should be in that coupe.

"Who is inside?" asked Philippin of himself.

It was Rose.

CHAPTER IV.

DISCOVERY OF A STAR.

When the young girl returned to her home, it was four o'clock in the morning. Her aunt, Madame Varnel, uneasy at her absence, had arisen, and was awaiting the first streak of dawn to go forth in search of information.

"You here at last!" quoth she, noticing Rose's entrance. "How pale you are! eyes red and swollen! What has happened to you, my child?"

"Leave me repose," responded Rose; "I will tell you all upon awakening. I am broken down."

Whatever may have been the state of her mind, she immediately went to sleep, falling into a heavy, agitated, but still profound slumber. At nine o'clock, when her aunt entered to carry her a cup of chocolate, she found her still asleep, yet lying almost across the bed. Her head hung over the side, her hair trailing almost to the carpeted floor. Her respiration was short, irregular and laborious. The widow made an effort to place her in a more comfortable position, which caused the girl to open her eyes. With clenched fingers she grasped some folds of the sheeting so tenaciously as to render loosening of her hold an impossibility.

Not until pear mid-day did Rose shake off the drowsiness succeeding her awakening. For more than three-quarters of an hour could she be heard turning about in her chamber. The widow listened; at times she imagined she heard sobs and sighs. At last the young girl emerged from her apartment. She was pallid, and her swollen eyes glistened with tear-drops. She went straightway to Madame Varnel.

"My aunt," said she, "we must separate."

"What say you?" quoth the widow. "Why must we separate?"

"Because it behooves that you no longer be mixed up with my course of life."

"O Heavens!" ejaculated the old lady, divining the young girl's misfortune.

A prolonged silence ensued; they were standing, the one facing the other, immovable, embarrassed, impassible.

Then the aunt fell into a chair. She spoke but one word:

"You!"

The extent of suffering in that word of grief, in the accent of its pronunciation, is indescribable. Rose, by night's reflections, had come to a conference, and, soon a tear, dropping from the old lady's eyelids, fell upon Rose's hair—upon that identical spot where, amid the pathways of the forest, George had placed his lips.

The crisis passed, the two women arose; then, without a reproach from the elder or a complaint from the younger, each passed into her own chamber.

It was Rose's intention to transfer to her aunt her modest income of eighteen hundred francs, which would permit of her living decently. For her own part, her salary would suffice for her support.

"No," replied the old lady, when, an hour subsequently, her neice made this proposition: "As long as I have a roof to shelter you, a morsel of bread to divide with you, you will not leave me. I will even go to the theatre with you, further-more, that, at the time of the call before the curtain, Sarcey, standing before the orchestra, applauded with all his energies."

"All that, doubtless, goes for something; still—still——"

"You love me, Rose?"

Some moments afterwards Philippin, followed by Flourquinet, arrived at the office of the stage-manager, where they remained in waiting orders from the management. They found George alone, his countenance calm, and a cigarette between his lips.

"My dear fellow," said Philippin with a glance towards Flourquinet, "there are three cuttings to make, three only. You will recognize them yourself; and, moreover, during an hour of rehearsal to-morrow everything will be arranged without troubling you to come hither. Is it understood?"

George looked upon both from a pinnacle not permitting him to remain in listlessness.

"Not a traitorous word," he said, "not a punctuation point! And should you desire to place me under obligations, return my piece. I will cause it to be performed elsewhere, and particularly in a different manner!"

Whereupon, forcing his hat upon his head, he saluted them with a solitary word:

"Good-night!"

Philippin, up to that point enchanted at the insignificant part devolved upon him, and who, to sustain credit with the manager, had feebly defended the piece, at once perceived the disgrace his embassy had entailed upon him.

"In fact," stammered he, "perhaps he may be right."

Then, darting through the corridor, he ran after George, whom he overtook in the Passage Jouffroy, by this time deserted by pedestrians.

"You," said La Trefailles to him, "are a good fellow, whose advice and friendship I esteem in everything touching my ordinary course of life. Still, as to my plays, I am annoyed at the necessity of informing you that you do not understand them in the least, and take too much interest in them. It is painful, I repeat, to be compelled to speak in this wise; henceforth act in such a shape as to have it said once for all."

Chilled to the core, Philippin endeavored to master his perturbation. He recoiled upon Flourquinet.

"An ass," interrupted George.

"To allow himself to be circumvented by Juliette."

"A noodle," rejoined the author.

Philippin, abandoning self-justification, made semblance of laughing.

"You are right," quoth he. "To-morrow's success will demonstrate the stupidity of their fears. Still, for all that, neither you nor I have dined; let us eat together, eh?"

"No," responded George; "this evening you dispense me."

With a degree of surprise La Trefailles' stout friend had followed George into the passage, not on the side of the boulevard, but towards the ga's of the Rue Grange-Bateliere. Descending the steps, both reached the sidewalk, when George stopped, tendering his hand.

"Good-night," he said.

"I will not take you home?"

"No."

"Where are you going, then?"

"You bore me, that's the end of it," said the young man. "I tell you you annoy me—there! I have need for being alone. Leave me to myself."

"Be it so," rejoined Philippin. "But to-morrow?"

"In the afternoon."

The two men separated.

Upon the opposite side of the street a coupe was drawn up in an obscure locality. Philippin, upon reaching the Faubourg Montmartre, and casting a sidelong glance, perceived his friend walk to this vehicle and mount into it without speaking to the driver. The man evidently knew where to set him down. Someone should be in that coupe.

"Who is inside?" asked Philippin of himself.

It was Rose.

CHAPTER IV.

DISCOVERY OF A STAR.

When the young girl returned to her home, it was four o'clock in the morning. Her aunt, Madame Varnel, uneasy at her absence, had arisen, and was awaiting the first streak of dawn to go forth in search of information.

"You here at last!" quoth she, noticing Rose's entrance. "How pale you are! eyes red and swollen! What has happened to you, my child?"

"Leave me repose," responded Rose; "I will tell you all upon awakening. I am broken down."

Whatever may have been the state of her mind, she immediately went to sleep, falling into a heavy, agitated, but still profound slumber. At nine o'clock, when her aunt entered to carry her a cup of chocolate, she found her still asleep, yet lying almost across the bed. Her head hung over the side, her hair trailing almost to the carpeted floor. Her respiration was short, irregular and laborious. The widow made an effort to place her in a more comfortable position, which caused the girl to open her eyes. With clenched fingers she grasped some folds of the sheeting so tenaciously as to render loosening of her hold an impossibility.

Not until pear mid-day did Rose shake off the drowsiness succeeding her awakening. For more than three-quarters of an hour could she be heard turning about in her chamber. The widow listened; at times she imagined she heard sobs and sighs. At last the young girl emerged from her apartment. She was pallid, and her swollen eyes glistened with tear-drops. She went straightway to Madame Varnel.

"My aunt," said she, "we must separate."

"What say you?" quoth the widow. "Why must we separate?"

"Because it behooves that you no longer be mixed up with my course of life."

"O Heavens!" ejaculated the old lady, divining the young girl's misfortune.

A prolonged silence ensued; they were standing, the one facing the other, immovable, embarrassed, impassible.

Then the aunt fell into a chair. She spoke but one word:

"You!"

The extent of suffering in that word of grief, in the accent of its pronunciation, is indescribable. Rose, by night's reflections, had come to a conference, and, soon a tear, dropping from the old lady's eyelids, fell upon Rose's hair—upon that identical spot where, amid the pathways of the forest, George had placed his lips.

The crisis passed, the two women arose; then, without a reproach from the elder or a complaint from the younger, each passed into her own chamber.

It was Rose's intention to transfer to her aunt her modest income of eighteen hundred francs, which would permit of her living decently. For her own part, her salary would suffice for her support.

"No," replied the old lady, when, an hour subsequently, her neice made this proposition: "As long as I have a roof to shelter you, a morsel of bread to divide with you, you will not leave me. I will even go to the theatre with you, further-more, that, at the time of the call before the curtain, Sarcey, standing before the orchestra, applauded with all his energies."

"All that, doubtless, goes for something; still—still——"

Actors have a scent of success, and, with greater exactitude, they said:

"It is the failure of an actress."

Rose learned that the stage-manager was closeted with Flourquinet in Juliette's dressing-room, where was being discussed the necessity for a conference on the morrow, with a view of cutting down the first act, as well as the third, and of rearranging certain scenic movements.

The young woman resolved to await the termination of the debate, and, pained at her comrades' expressions, moved towards the stage-manager's office. The door was half open; those entering or emerging threatened to jostle against the girl in the obscurity; she conceived it to be no indiscretion to enter. At her first step inside she perceived a man, leaning with his elbows upon the table, his face covered by his hands, motionless, silent; it was George. She recognized him. There was he, wearied, troubled, and, perchance, ill! From time to time, a movement of his shoulders denoted a nervous crisis. —Doubtless, reaction from the evening's excitement. Tremulous herself, she made a movement, the noise of which was heard by George. Abruptly he raised his head and gazed upon her anxiously. His eyes were red and humid; two tears trickled down his cheeks.

"Ah!" exclaimed Rose, "you are weeping!"

George drew himself upright and extended his hand with a sorrowful smile:

"My nervous system is shaken," replied he. "These four hours have been fatal to me, and for what a result!"

Rose endeavored to console him.

"Ah!" quoth he, "no one better than I knows what to think of it. Did a doubt remain me at the most, see how they have abandoned me. Where was all of those overwhelming me in the morning with sycophantic friendship? Even to Philippin, all have deserted me. Luck turns against me; they shun me, they isolate me, as one stricken by the plague. It is a fearful trade, this of ours, mademoiselle; still, it is not the first time that I have seen with my own eyes the odium of misfortune, and the uncharitableness of society. While I shed tear-drops, two thousand men rub their hands and gloat in mockery of me."

There was in his words, according to Rose's opinion, naught save the exaggeration of a perturbed mind.

"However," he continued with bitterness, "you perceive the condition to which I am reduced. I am awaiting the decision of the manager and stage-manager as to amputations to be performed on the morrow."

"And will you consent to it?" asked Rose indignantly. "Will you permit these people, comprehending it not, to lay hands upon your piece? Oh! I implore you, do not surrender yourself in that manner. Your comedy is a masterpiece, and if it has not met with the success it deserves, it is simply on account of bad acting from beginning to end. For your own sake, sir, suffer it not to be touched nor in anywise deranged. No one has capacity so to do; let it be done, it will be treason to the public, and worse treason to yourself. It must not be done. And if your sympathy for me amounts to aught, I ask, as a favor, that you repel the slightest mutilation."

The young girl's animation, the determination by her exhibited, resolved instantaneously the unhappy man's energy. Anew he tendered her his hand and gazed upon her countenance fixedly.

"You, then, care for me?" he inquired in a troubled voice.

She drooped her eyes, and George, drawing her gently towards him, added in a low tone:

"You love me, Rose?"

Some moments afterwards Philippin, followed by Flourquinet, arrived at the office of the stage-manager, where they remained in waiting orders from the management. They found George alone, his countenance calm, and a cigarette between his lips.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

☞ Letters seeking information replied to only through this department must be answers by mail.

E. S. C., Louisville.—You asked for a decision. We cannot enter into a dissertation upon cards at the same time. We have neither time nor space. This we will say, however: Neither yourself nor your antagonist "understood himself thoroughly." His consent was not at all necessary after you to take back that revoke. Except in honor, you were not bound to play a heart merely because you said you had one. You could withdraw the club in spite of him (the trick'd had not yet been turned and quitted), because the original playing of it would cause a revoke. No one can be required consciously to revoke, and you could save yourself from the penalty of a revoke in no other way than by playing a heart. Your leading mistake is in supposing that you had the option of playing either a heart or a trump. You had that option until you played a club; after that it was simply a question of a heart or a revoke. You could make the second play only upon the ground that you had a heart to play, and it would not remedy the revoking aspect to play a trump and keep back the heart. With reference to the conversation that passed between partner and antagonist, we lay no stress upon that. It merely bound you in honor to play a heart—in other words, it shut the door against "sharp practice."

Observer, Pensacola.—"1. In a game of pinpool, if the ball moves the pin one-quarter of an inch off the spot without knocking the pin down, and it remains on the spot when the ball is stopped, has the pin to be taken off the table, or has the ball to be spotted, and the pin put in its proper place? 2. If a ball is accidentally moved by a player, has the ball to remain where it is, or has it to be spotted?" 1. No. 2. In throwing out the balls, has any of the players the right to demand from the gamekeeper to shake his own ball out of the basket? 3. Has a player shooting at a ball the right to declare he hits the ball, and makes pool, is such shot foul?"..... 1. The pin is to be taken off. 2. If it was the ball he was about to play with, it is to be spotted; if due to any other ball, practice varies. 3. The object of this question is not clear. All the balls are supposed to be shaken fairly out of the "basket." Practice varies again, it being low in some contests and not foul in others. In fact, pinpool is like any game of cards in which money is at stake—the people engaged in it play it pretty much to suit themselves. There has never been an established principle.

Fabo.—"Will you kindly decide the following, upon which a good deal of money has been bet? 1. What is the odds, or a game in which everything is even, that a particular player does not win four straight heats? 2. The same that he does not win five? 3. Two players; each with the same amount of capital, are playing the same game on the same table, each of whom bets $20 at a time and the other only $5. Is it possible for the latter to be broke before he who starts at $20? Bear in mind that both bet the same way on the same card. Please, if convenient, print the questions and answers."..... 1. Fifteen to one. 2. Thirty-one to one. 2. What you probably mean can be done. As you state it the question is incorrect, it looks to us as if the $5 man cannot be broken first. Our opinion is that "a good deal of money" has never been bet on these three points, and that it be a long time since any money has been bet on any one of them.

Aquahonga.—"Can two persons, both being inhabitants of the same State, be elected to the Presidency and Vice-presidency of the United States?" Yes. The twelfth amendment to the Constitution can only be interpreted as meaning, when it says that only one of the two candidates voted for by the assembled electors in each State shall be a resident of the State in themselves, that the electors for New York, for example, could not vote for Tilden for President and Wheeler for Vice-president, whether those persons on the ticket in each were an organized party ticket. "But if the electors of all the other States could vote for Tilden and Wheeler. Such, at least, is the view we take of it. The clause cannot have been intended to apply to the electors in the world at large, as that would be tantamount to declaring that, if the person chosen for President be a resident of one of the States, the person to be chosen Vice-president must be a foreigner, or at least a resident of one of our territories.

Scarface No. 2, Augusta.—"A and B bet on a certain horse in a certain heat. A bets that said horse sniff not win the heat, and B bets that he will. The heat is trotted, and proves a dead heat. Which wins? 2. A and B are shaking dice. A shakes three aces and bets B that he (B) cannot beat it. B takes the bet, and does so. Does the bet stand, and is not the principle the same in both of these cases?"..... 1. It is a draw. 2. The principle is the same; but the turf bet is governed by turf rules, and the latter case would be held to be a draw. There is no such special rule governing dice, and B loses.

Gowtur.—"1. Have the nine-pin bowling-alleys been stopped by law, or did they stop on account of billiards? 2. When did Sam Devere go on the stage first with the banjo?"..... 1. On account of law. Big-bellied pins and billiards together were caused to stop for a while about twenty odd years ago. 2. Sam Devere has been before the public for some years. We cannot tell you when he first appeared, as he was unknown to us in public, before meeting him, inclosing a stamp for reply, in care of this office, will probably elicit the information.

J. H. J., Waterbury.—"In your issue of this date you give S. A. Richmond the answer in a hand of cribbage as 24 for four sevens and one ace. Now I count the hand 26, viz., the seven of hearts, seven of spades seven of diamonds, and ace, 12; the seven of clubs, seven of spades, seven of diamonds and ace, 12, which is 24. Now, the seven of hearts and seven of clubs have not been counted together, with the ace making fifteen—two, and a total of 26. If you will explain this count you will oblige."..... Our decision is right, viz., 12 by 15's and 12 for a double pair-royal.

T. C. H., Kansas City.—"A runner runs from second base on a foul ball; ball is caught by a fielder and put to the pitcher, pitcher throws the ball to second-baseman before the runner returns to the base. Is the runner entitled to a home run?"..... If it was a foul fly and caught, there was no need of its being sent to the pitcher first; but in the case of a foul-bound catch, or any other kind of foul ball, it must go to the pitcher before it is in play. In the case you state the runner was out.

Many Readers, Buffalo.—"Will you please inform many readers of your valuable paper if the steamship Quaker City was in the United States service during the Rebellion; and if so, what was she—a transport or a man-of-war—and also what station she was on?"..... All of the, we believe, we may simply say, transports. Afterwards she was a tug-boat, and in 1863 was attached to the South Atlantic Squadron, and fired shot off Charleston.

M. L., Jersey City.—"I had a bet on the Chicago and St. Louis game of the 21st, that the winning club would not win in one inning. Do I lose or win this bet?"..... You lose. The score was 9 to 0 for forfeiture, the losing club having withdrawn when the playing score was 7 to 6. Your misfortune is no greater in this case than if you had bet that the club which was given the game by forfeiture would lose it. The principle is the same in both cases.

G. W. V. C., Flushing.—1. Forty-five cents. 2. The dealer had no right to look at that card or any other belonging to his antagonist's hand. 3. Too old to learn new and up-to-date song-and-dance business. See our advertising columns for the address of a teacher. 4. About 28 and 18 years respectively. 5. We cannot say whether Sam Fuller is teaching the banjo now or not.

J. G., Erie.—"A bets B on a game of ball between the Nonchalants and the Neshannocks, the latter going in first. The Neshannocks that the winning club would win in three innings. And as it was before the game, doesn't he have to take the first three innings, and not be allowed to pick any innings?"..... No. He takes the club's highest innings.

B. B. C., New Brighton.—1. The decision was correct. The base, or whatever material is used to fill in the space on the part or space where it should be fastened. 2. With base-runners on first and second bases, two men out, and a man forced out at second after the man at third had run home, the run does not count, as the third man out was forced out.

Sitting Bull, Richmond.—"If a man is on first base, and hits at the bat and strikes a foul ball, and the man at first leaves his base while the first-baseman goes after the ball, can the pitcher receive the ball at first base and put the man out? The man, in this case, cannot be put out on a foul unless it is a fly ball, and then any fielder can put him out.

J. M. H., Utica.—"One man out, bases full, ball batted to first baseman and striker put out there, man on third gets home without being touched. Does the run score, though the ball is held on home base before he touches it?"..... The run counts. The base-runner should have been touched, as he ceased to be forced off after the striker was put out.

J. H., Beck Hotel.—"If a husband and wife are traveling, both Americans, and giving birth to an infant in a foreign country, would that child be a citizen, and entitled to the office of President of the United States?"..... Were the child a male, it might become President of the United States; and, at all events, the mere fact of its being born abroad would not affect its eligibility.

Mack, La.—Boston Store: Kelly's hand would be nothing objectionable in your adopting the stage. See the various managers in your city, state the facts plainly to them, and solicit an engagement. We would advise you to give up trifling playing, for your own amusement. It would require years of toil to arrive at eminence, and even then your success might not be profitable in a pecuniary sense.

"James Gannon" Chronicle: Has arrived in this country, Sept. 14, 1869. 2. He fought Tom Allen May 10, 1870. Heenan was handed a lac-simile of the bell for which he fought Sayers; but, as the committee who presented it to give it had not paid for its manufacture, he had it in his possession for a short time only. 4. Mace and Allen fought 10 rounds in 44 minutes. Mace winning.

Clipper Associates, Boston.—1. You vote what is called the electoral ticket. 2. It is not possible for a majority of the people to vote for a President and still not elect him." For in point of fact the people do not vote at all for President. They vote for electors, and the latter in turn cast their votes for President and Vice-president.

Constant Reader.—"If circus-manager distinctly engaged you for the remainder of the season, and you can prove that you conscientiously discharged your duties, you can recover judgment against him from the date of your discharge to the end of the season.

Cosmopolitan.—Go to Robt. M. DeWitt, No. 33 Race street, and purchase a copy of the printed play that has business, scenery, properties and costumes described therein, and then prepare your M.S. in the same manner, writing on one side of the sheet only, and leaving plenty of margin.

W. H. H., Phila.—1. In walking 1,000 miles in 1,000 consecutive hours, the walker can walk two miles at a stretch—during the latter part of one hour and the first part of the next hour—thereby gaining an hour and a half's rest. 2. It is not been done here.

Concord.—"A says the statue to be erected by the Province of Hedley Island is to be a statue of Lafayette. B says it is to be a statue of 'Liberty.'"..... It is to be a statue of Lafayette, which will also answer as a symbol of Liberty.

J. M., Brooklyn.—"..... three tens, B holds a full hand. J calls B; he (B) says 'Two pair.' J takes in the pot. Who is entitled to the money, J or B? or does a hand show for itself in a game of bluff?"..... B takes the pot if he can show a full hand.

D. C., Holyoke.—Pat Rooney was performing at the Olympic Theatre, this city, in July, 1875.

E. B. M.—Barnum's Museum, on Broadway above Spring street, was destroyed by fire March 3, 1868. Although Spring does not, scientifically speaking, commence until the vernal equinox, yet, popularly speaking, it is considered to commence March 1 in the latitude. Therefore we decide that the fire occurred in the Spring—and not in the Winter—when a decision is called for, though our recommendation is always that such bets be drawn, inasmuch as neither party can be absolutely wrong.

Constant Reader, Howell.—"One nine has had six innings' play and the other seven, the score at the close of the even six innings being 11 to 3, in favor of the nine having had their six innings only. Darkness then stops play, and the umpire decides it a draw. Is he right?"..... No; the game was won by 11 to 3 at the close of the sixth even inning.

J. F. and Q., New Orleans.—1. A's anchor counts before B's pedro. 2. That would amount to considerable less than $1,000,000,000, at the most liberal estimate. 3. Is the taking of Longfellow's time. It is of no account. It was said to have been made in a fractional part of a race, but the timing was that of private watches—all but that of the judges. It might as well be called 1:35 as anything else.

D. M., Riverdale.—The club playing without an error does not earn a game if they obtain the winning runs by their opponents' fielding errors. On the contrary, the fact that their opponents scored their runs not by errors, but by good play, should give the merit of earning to the other side. If at all.

G. E. McK., Newark.—You are not too old to commence the dramatic profession. It would depend entirely upon your natural qualifications and your aptitude for learning the art as to how it would take you to become a good comedian. Salary ranges from $25 upwards, according to merit and reputation.

H. S. T., Philadelphia.—See answer to "A Reader, Boston," in Clipper dated Aug. 26. Follow the same instructions exactly—except, of course, you will use cigars. Do not exactly—except, of course, you will use cigars. Do not exhibit the cigar too close at first, or you will overheat the holder.

C. W. S.—Cornell was first represented in the intercollegiate regatta in 1875, by the "Undine," whose memory, when she was not placed. She was fifth in 1874, won both University and Freshmen races in 1873, and all three this year.

Constant Reader, Brooklyn.—1. Billy Edwards and Sam Collyer fought three times—at Cherry Point, Va., Aug. 24, 1868; at Mystic Island, Ct., March 2, 1870; and at Mill Creek, Pa., Aug. 11, 1874. 2. Edwards and Tim Collins fought May 23, 1871.

Baseball, Calvert.—The rules require that the ball be delivered to the bat "with the arm swinging nearly perpendicularly by the side of the body." This is impossible if the pitcher bends his body as you describe, consequently the delivery you refer to is illegal.

W. S., Rondout.—The umpire can decide a game as forfeited should either of the contesting nines refuse to play, if one inning has been played, or even half an inning. The rule you quote does not refer to games forfeited by one party refusing to play.

P. P. P., Marysville.—Goldsmith Maid was sold by Alden Goldsmith to (Budd) Doble & Jackman in the latter part of 1868, and the latter only continued to own her, at least nominally, for two years or so.

J. A. W., Philadelphia.—Brookhouse Bowler, the husband of the late Annie Kemp Bowler, is still living, and during the past season was a member of the Holman Opera Troupe.

Mate, Philadelphia.—"There are nine players in the Centennial Tournament. They are each to play two games with each other. How many games do they actually play?"..... Seventy-two, exclusive of possible ties.

C. E. S., Warren.—No answers by mail. A loses, because when Texas Jack and Buffalo Bill first performed through the country they had a troupe of Indians with them.

Four Henry.—"A bets B that the Essex County delegation would vote for Cornell on first ballot, at Saratoga Republican Convention, Aug. 22, 23, 1876. Cornell withdrew, and nobody voted for him. Which wins?"..... It is a draw.

R. H.—"Is there any limit in Section 4 to the three-ball carom game, in a public match or tournament? 2. Also, of how many points the game was composed in which Section made a run of 229?" Not over 500.

Old Subscriber, Middletown.—A reply to such a query would involve the work of going over the innings' score of 211 games, for which we have not the time to spare, nor have we all the data before us.

League Pennant, Baltimore.—The Cincinnati Club was Chicagoed ten times between April and Aug. 26. The St. Louis Club was Chicagoed nine times between times, and the Chicago and Hartford seven times each.

E. M., Wheeling.—To be eligible for the League Association, the club must first be a regularly organized company, and, secondly, must hail from a city where a League club exists, or from a city of less than 75,000 inhabitants.

F. M. C., Pierce.—The penalty is the loss of the points made, and the privilege of the next inning. In short, the penalty is inoperative if the adversary allows the foul play to pass without protest.

Sam Brookmore, city.—Put bets F the Chicago beats the Reds two to one and four over. The score stands—Chicago, 5; Reds, 0. .....If this alleged singular bet was made, and if it is left to us for decision, B loses.

J. A. S.—"Four handed euchre (partners). I deal my partner a lone hand. Has he the privilege to play it alone or not? Playing with twenty-four cards, no assisting."..... We are not posted upon euchre.

T. C. B.—We do not keep a record of such matters. By addressing a letter, containing a stamp for reply, to the master-machinist of the theatre, you will probably obtain the desired information.

Declined—"Pope and Sultan," "Fidele a Jamaise," "Habby Liddel Ditcher," "De Band of Gabriel," "Sweet Melody," "Memoirs," "Slavery Home," "Bretel, Dipped Mit Beer."

A. T. H., Norfolk.—We do not know. The New York Times has cabled that a number of clubs, seven or eight, seven of diamonds and ace, 12, which is 24. Now, the seven of hearts and seven of clubs have not been counted together, with the ace making fifteen—two, and a total of 26. If you will explain this count you will oblige."..... Our decision is right, viz., 12 by 15's and 12 for a double pair-royal.

T. C. H., Kansas City.—"A runner runs from second base on a foul ball; ball is caught by a fielder and put to the pitcher, pitcher throws the ball to second-baseman before the runner returns to the base. Is the runner entitled to a home run?"..... If it was a foul fly and caught, there was no need of its being sent to the pitcher first; but in the case of a foul-bound catch, or any other kind of foul ball, it must go to the pitcher before it is in play. In the case you state the runner was out.

Many Readers, Buffalo.—"Will you please inform many readers of your valuable paper if the steamship Quaker City was in the United States service during the Rebellion; and if so, what was she—a transport or a man-of-war—and also what station she was on?"..... All of the, we believe, we may simply say, transports. Afterwards she was a tug-boat, and in 1863 was attached to the South Atlantic Squadron, and fired shot off Charleston.

M. L., Jersey City.—"I had a bet on the Chicago and St. Louis game of the 21st, that the winning club would not win in one inning. Do I lose or win this bet?"..... You lose. The score was 9 to 0 for forfeiture, the losing club having withdrawn when the playing score was 7 to 6. Your misfortune is no greater in this case than if you had bet that the club which was given the game by forfeiture would lose it. The principle is the same in both cases.

G. W. V. C., Flushing.—1. Forty-five cents. 2. The dealer had no right to look at that card or any other belonging to his antagonist's hand. 3. Too old to learn new and up-to-date song-and-dance business. See our advertising columns for the address of a teacher. 4. About 28 and 18 years respectively. 5. We cannot say whether Sam Fuller is teaching the banjo now or not.

J. G., Erie.—"A bets B on a game of ball between the Nonchalants and the Neshannocks, the latter going in first. The Neshannocks that the winning club would win in three innings. And as it was before the game, doesn't he have to take the first three innings, and not be allowed to pick any innings?"..... No. He takes the club's highest innings.

B. B. C., New Brighton.—1. The decision was correct. The base, or whatever material is used to fill in the space on the part or space where it should be fastened. 2. With base-runners on first and second bases, two men out, and a man forced out at second after the man at third had run home, the run does not count, as the third man out was forced out.

Sitting Bull, Richmond.—"If a man is on first base, and hits at the bat and strikes a foul ball, and the man at first leaves his base while the first-baseman goes after the ball, can the pitcher receive the ball at first base and put the man out? The man, in this case, cannot be put out on a foul unless it is a fly ball, and then any fielder can put him out.

J. M. H., Utica.—"One man out, bases full, ball batted to first baseman and striker put out there, man on third gets home without being touched. Does the run score, though the ball is held on home base before he touches it?"..... The run counts. The base-runner should have been touched, as he ceased to be forced off after the striker was put out.

J. H., Beck Hotel.—"If a husband and wife are traveling, both Americans, and giving birth to an infant in a foreign country, would that child be a citizen, and entitled to the office of President of the United States?"..... Were the child a male, it might become President of the United States; and, at all events, the mere fact of its being born abroad would not affect its eligibility.

Mack, La.—Boston Store: Kelly's hand would be nothing objectionable in your adopting the stage. See the various managers in your city, state the facts plainly to them, and solicit an engagement. We would advise you to give up trifling playing, for your own amusement. It would require years of toil to arrive at eminence, and even then your success might not be profitable in a pecuniary sense.

"James Gannon" Chronicle: Has arrived in this country, Sept. 14, 1869. 2. He fought Tom Allen May 10, 1870. Heenan was handed a lac-simile of the bell for which he fought Sayers; but, as the committee who presented it to give it had not paid for its manufacture, he had it in his possession for a short time only. 4. Mace and Allen fought 10 rounds in 44 minutes. Mace winning.

Clipper Associates, Boston.—1. You vote what is called the electoral ticket. 2. It is not possible for a majority of the people to vote for a President and still not elect him." For in point of fact the people do not vote at all for President. They vote for electors, and the latter in turn cast their votes for President and Vice-president.

Constant Reader.—"If circus-manager distinctly engaged you for the remainder of the season, and you can prove that you conscientiously discharged your duties, you can recover judgment against him from the date of your discharge to the end of the season.

Cosmopolitan.—Go to Robt. M. DeWitt, No. 33 Race street, and purchase a copy of the printed play that has business, scenery, properties and costumes described therein, and then prepare your M.S. in the same manner, writing on one side of the sheet only, and leaving plenty of margin.

W. H. H., Phila.—1. In walking 1,000 miles in 1,000 consecutive hours, the walker can walk two miles at a stretch—during the latter part of one hour and the first part of the next hour—thereby gaining an hour and a half's rest. 2. It is not been done here.

Concord.—"A says the statue to be erected by the Province of Hedley Island is to be a statue of Lafayette. B says it is to be a statue of 'Liberty.'"..... It is to be a statue of Lafayette, which will also answer as a symbol of Liberty.

J. M., Brooklyn.—"..... three tens, B holds a full hand. J calls B; he (B) says 'Two pair.' J takes in the pot. Who is entitled to the money, J or B? or does a hand show for itself in a game of bluff?"..... B takes the pot if he can show a full hand.

D. C., Holyoke.—Pat Rooney was performing at the Olympic Theatre, this city, in July, 1875.

Constant Reader.—We would not advise you to believe that he performed the feat then, but we cannot prove that he did.

Y. E. G., Mobile.—As the theatres throughout the country have not yet opened for the season, it is impossible to say.

Poet-Eads.—Mace and Allen fought at the Metairie race-course, New Orleans, La., May 10, 1858.

Tribute to Water.

Ye limpid water, cooling draught of earth,
We greet thy birth.
Thy nectar clear is drunk, and deemed divine.
[But none of it in mine.—Our Jim.]

The silent typographical dissimilarity between the second and the other pages of last week's Clipper is to be explained by the fact that, as we were on the eve of sending our paper to press, one of the forms, passing rapidly from the fifth story to the basement, tumbled into chaos. Time was when nothing short of a day could have repaired so grave a disaster, but in this age of enterprise and push but few things are impossible; and with the aid of The Herald and The Times the page was speedily reset, and our paper enabled to go to press within a few hours of its usual time. Besides thanking these great dailies for their assistance, we desire to testify to the accuracy with which the necessarily hurried type-setting of an entire page was done. So far as has come under our observation, there were but two serious errors—one lengthens the time of Kadi's running mile from 1:41¼ to 1:41¾, and the other shortens True Blue's two-mile running time from 3:33½ to 2:32½. These were in our "Answers to Correspondents;" and "Vancouver," to whom this particular reply was addressed, will please make a note of these circumstances. As for The Times and The Herald, we think we express a sufficient appreciation of their prompt co-operation when we add that we hope The Clipper may never be called upon to help either out of a similar difficulty. We especially appreciate the favor and courtesy extended to us by Mr. Monroe F. Gale, foreman of The Times composing-room, and his able deputy Mr. Wells; and our thanks are no less due to Mr. Thompson, foreman of The Herald.

Wm. Covert, proprietor of the news agency in the Continental Hotel, Philadelphia, has sent us a communication in reference to an article in our last, which stated that parties had been charged fifteen cents per copy for Clippers purchased at his stand. Mr. Covert assures us that he charges only the face-value for any weekly paper sold at his agency, and that he has never, since war times, charged more than ten cents per copy for our paper. From this it would appear that we have been misinformed as to the extra charges, and that the parties so informing us have not stated facts. We are glad to have this assurance from Mr. Covert, and to have the opportunity to place him right before the public.

Lager.

Surely 'twas nectar such as this that jovial Jove of old
Imbibed on Mount Olympus, 'neath the shadow of his eagle:
The very name, indeed, implies that 'tis of royal birth,
For if you spell it backward you will find that it is regal!

An interested correspondent writes to ascertain whether the young man who, on Aug. 24, walked from the top of Mount Washington to Portland, distance ninety miles, "parts his hair in the middle." As if that had anything to do with it.

Jim confidentially informs us that he was in a faro bank the other night (on duty, of course), and, having a dollar in his hand, somebody said: "Do stake it!" The inexperienced lad obeyed, and saw the deuce take it.

Jersey Day at the Centennial was a "big Thursday," there being more than fifty-five thousand paid admissions on that occasion. We might add that there was not a Jersey "blue" among those in attendance.

Potato-bugs are a much belied race. Last year they were credited with eating up all the potatoes, and yet potatoes were never before so cheap. Let justice be done the friendly bug!

Big Day.—It is said that the paid admissions to the Centennial Exposition on Saturday, Aug. 26—half-price day—exceeded those of any other day the number being computed at more than ninety thousand.

"Martha Washington" was among the arrivals at the Transcontinental Hotel, West Philadelphia, on Aug. 23. Mother and Martha are doing as well as can be expected under the circumstances.

An exchange ventilates the fact that about twice in every hundred thousand pounds of fish daily. And yet we fail to perceive any improvement in the mental calibre of the residents there.

The Summer resorts have disgorged, and the landlords are doctoring their balance-sheets, some of which, it is feared, will not show an encouraging set of figures in the right column.

There has been considerable talk about "the unhealthy condition of our sewers." Our Jim says it's no wonder, when they only get a dollar a dozen for shirts.

Our Tormentors.

Those dreaded mosquitoes are with us again,
They fly to the city from river and wood:
Although they're undoubtedly here to remain,
It cannot be said that they've "come back for good."

"You resemble the devotees of our national game," said Mrs. Calhoosey to her "indisposed" husband, "because you so often make your home base."

An old-fashioned fireman's parade is to take place in Philadelphia on the 6th of September, when the veterans will once more be in their glory.

Let us remind the belligerent reader that time is particularly valuable in a pugilistic encounter, for then each second is of great importance!

The Irish crew do not believe in substitutes in case of accident at the coming international races, as each man is used to Dublin, himself.

What "Might Have Been."—If Cain had killed his brother with a missile from a mortar, it would have been a bomb in Abel, wouldn't it?

We put this where it will do the most good—When a machinist is going to buy valves, he had better patronize Fulton Market.

Talking about the horse-race, it is an admitted fact that English horses are very sensitive—they take a fence so easily.

Nautical.

"Avast heaving," said the Captain.
The man obeyed his will;
But there was still a vast heaving,
For the passengers were ill!

Rich people often visit the mountains in the Fall; the poor go to Central Park to see the fountains in the "Mall."

It may not be generally known, nevertheless it is true, that Mrs. Colt prefers soldiers when they order arms!

The N. Y. Athletic Club are to hold their annual Fall games on their grounds at Mott Haven, N. Y., on Saturday afternoon, Sept. 30. The following games, open to all amateurs, constitute the programme: 100 yards, 440 yards, 880 yards and one mile runs, 120-yard hurdle race, one, three and seven-mile walks, running high and broad jumps, putting the shot, and throwing the hammer. Prizes will be given to first and second in each event, and, if more than ten entries are received for any event, a third prize is promised.

THE PENNANT RECORD.

The Western nines, having completed their local club series, are now on route for the East to play their last Eastern-tour games of the season, the series commencing simultaneously in Brooklyn, Hartford, Philadelphia and Boston on Tuesday, Sept. 5. In the interim the four Western nines and the Boston Club will be picking up country half-dollars in exhibition games with the leading semi-professional teams of the East. As additional interest has been imparted to the pennant-race contests by the peculiar circumstance which must necessarily tend to weaken the play of the Hartford nine, and that is the personal quarrel between Bond and Ferguson, which the club has injudiciously allowed to appear in print. Bond in the heat of a discussion allowed some unguarded remarks to escape him touching the honesty of Ferguson's play in some recent games, and they were published in The Hartford Times. In reply, a card of indignant denial appeared in that paper from Ferguson, and there the matter stands. With the pitcher and third-baseman of the team "at daggers drawn," each having his sympathizers in the nine, harmonious play together will be difficult. Taking this condition of things into account, with the marked improvement in the play of the Boston team, and the additional fact of the close of the series between the St. Louis and Chicago nines, with the consequent incentive to extra exertion which those games gave the St. Louis contingent, and it will be seen that the struggle for the second and third places in the race becomes more doubtful as to the ultimate result than at any time this season. The record shows that Louis is in the van for second place by 35 to the Hartford's 33, while Boston is close to Hartford with a record of 30. Chicago still has a lead for first place, but the game is very uncertain, and the Eastern-tour games may make a decided change in the relative positions of the clubs. Up to Aug. 27, inclusive, the record stood as follows:

	Won.	Lost.
Chicago	43	18
St. Louis	35	17
Hartford	33	15
Boston	30	22
Louisville	25	29
Mutual	25	27
Athletic	13	28
Cincinnati	7	45
	205	205

THE WESTERN CHAMPIONSHIP.

The event next in importance to the League-pennant championship is the struggle between the four Western clubs for the local championship honors of the Western States, in which the contestants are the Chicago, St. Louis, Louisville, and Cincinnati Clubs. This was practically settled last week on the occasion of the close of the series between the Chicago and St. Louis and Louisville and Cincinnati Clubs, the honors of the championship of the West remaining with Chicago, as the appended record shows:

	Chicago.	St. Louis.	Louisville.	Cincin-nati.	Games lost.
Chicago	—	4	9	10	23
St. Louis	4	—	6	7	19
Louisville	1	4	—	7	12
Cincinnati	0	2	2	—	4
Games lost	7	10	17	25	59

The Chicago Club not only leads St. Louis in total won games by 23 to 19, but in fewer defeats by 7 to 10. Besides which, the Chicago nine is the only League team which has not been defeated by any side clubs. St. Louis has one more game to play with Cincinnati, which may leave her score of victories at 20. On the other hand, however, St. Louis can boast of defeating the Chicagos in a majority of the contests, club vs. club, their record standing at 6 to 4 in won games.

CHICAGO vs. ST. LOUIS.

The third and fourth games (scores of the first and second appear upon another page), played last week by these clubs in Chicago, Aug. 28, 26, resulted in a victory for each; but the defeat sustained by the Browns on the closing day was far more disastrous than any received by the Whites. Numerous errors were made upon both sides:

The Metas went to Taunton, Mass., Aug. 19, and won a creditable victory from the Actives of that city. The game was a fine one, marked by few errors, very effective pitching, and many fine plays on both sides. The errors of the Metas yielded only first base, while those of their opponents were more costly, giving two runs. In the sixth inning Mills was out on a foul bound, Dillenback hit safe to right, Lennon advanced him to second by a base hit, and he reached third on a bad throw by Buck; Kimball went out to centre, Dillenback scoring after the catch, and Brown was out short to first. In the seventh inning Haskell hit for two bases to left field, and scored on Davis' overthrow off Sweasy's hit. While but four of the Actives reached first, none saw second base.

The Metas started on a centennial trip Aug. 21, and played the Lewhon Club of Philadelphia on the 22d. About twelve hundred people witnessed the game, which was well contested throughout, the playing of Krauss and Smith of the home nine, and Sweasy, Nelson, and Dillenback for the Metas, being noticeable. The Lewhons made an earned run in the second inning, and again in the third by good batting and base-running. The Metas put in an earned run in the fourth, another on errors in the seventh, and again earned one in the eighth, off a two-baser by Brown and a single by Sweasy.

BRIDGEPORT vs. NEW HAVEN.

The Bridgeport, Ct., Club defeated the New Haven nine for the second time this season Aug. 23, at New Haven. The Bridgeports batted Cassidy very hard, Rourke, Briggs, Snigg and Rowan hitting each a two-baser, while, on the other hand, the New Havens were greatly troubled by Snigg's pitching. This, combined with several loose plays in the field, lost them the game.

STAGE-STRUCK.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

His head was like a cocoanut, his youth had somewhat waned;
He hadn't common sense enough "to go in when it rained;"
He toiled behind a counter, but it put him in a rage—
He knew his proper destiny was "acting on the stage."

He'd since you with the yardstick, shouting "Lead me to the fray!"
And measure out the muslin in a most dramatic way.
And then he'd loudly bellow, in a voice he thought "immense:"
"What be! within there, caitiff! bring the change, eleven cents."

He'd treat you to the "Curse of Rome," and never stop for breath,
And quiet country customers he'd frighten half to death.
When they would ask him to direct them how to go elsewhere,
He'd answer them: "Down, down to hell, and say I sent thee there."

Of course our hero grew to be a most decided bore,
And so they murmured: "One, two, three!" then "bounced" him from the store.
And now, in deep financial straits, his "occupation gone,"
He hangs around the theatres in hopes of "getting on."

"Not as a 'super'—oh, dear, no!" he answers one and all;
"If I can't open in Macbeth, I shan't appear at all.
Why, my impersonation, sir, would be so new and good,
'Twould make the folks get up and howl." N. B.—I fear it would!

He dogs the actors so and fro, accosts both "stock" and "stars,"
And tries to gain their influence with very bad cigars.
He thinks the managers will have an "opening" for him still;
But, as they're gentlemen of sense, I don't believe they will.

EDWARD E. KIDDER.

A WILD RACE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY WILLIAM H. BUSHNELL.

"You'll git yerself inter trouble, Tom. No man ever did er thing of ther kind in er country like this without havin' ter pay dearly for it," and the old frontiersman knocked the ashes out of his pipe in the most positive manner and bowed his head thoughtfully.

"I don't anticipate any danger, and, even if there is, should not have done otherwise than I did. Thank Heaven, I have enough of manhood in my nature to stand between a woman and abuse," replied Frank Bennett, with the flashing black eyes and compressed lips that revealed more than ordinary self-possession and disregard of consequences.

"A woman! Pshaw, a squaw!"

"It is one and the same thing."

"Caramba! You don't understand ther temper of ther country yer in," scoffed his older companion. "When yer've bin here as long as I have you'll l'arn that redskins, buck or doe, am not counted worth as much as er sarpint, and hated twice as badly. It war er hazardous thing ter do anyway, my boy, and if yer take my advice you'll git out of this jest as quick as ever yer kin."

"Never! I never yet ran from mortal man, and shall not now from a party of half-drunken, hotheaded brutes. But don't give yourself any uneasiness. They were in their cups last night, drinking, and with their temper soured by gambling, and will be ashamed of themselves to-day, even if they remember anything about it."

"Yer wrong, wrong as er hound runnin' on er false trail, and it's only foolhardy ter try and outbrave them. I've takin er likin' ter yer, my boy, and am tellin' nothin' but ther bibil truth. Nothin' but ther accident of ther old stage comin' in jest when it did saved yer then, and it won't be forgottin any more than er miserable cayoter forgits ther ear or dead buffler lies. If it had been er white gal now, yer mought have stood some chance. But a squaw! Caramba! It makes me mad when I think what kind of bait tempted yer ter run yer head inter sich ecjiad fall," and the old hunter-miner began wiping out and carefully reloading his rifle as if newa had reached his ears of the hated Apaches being upon the warpath.

Upon the previous evening the little "one-horse" mining town of Good Luck had been the scene of a strange and striking tableau. A young, and, for her race, remarkably pretty daughter of the redman had presented herself with some forest trifles to dispose of. Contrary to custom, she had come alone, and was immediately insulted and abused by the coarse men, rendered even more brutal than usual by strong drink and loss at the gaming-table. She have attempted to retaliation would have been more than madness, and, though her little, black, bead-like eyes flashed with all the possible vindictiveness of her savage race, and her bosom heaved and every fibre quivered with intense passion, she attempted to steal away as silently as she had come. This, however, was not to be permitted. The brutal men circled around and tormented her with word and deed, and at last one laid his hand upon her blanket and tore it away, revealing her form naked to the waist. With a curse as bitter and hissing as the copperhead when in its coil, she sprang towards him, and would have buried her knife in his cowardly heart had she not been felled by a cruel blow—followed by kicks and the most scandalous indignities.

This was too much for Frank Bennett, a young, enthusiastic and newly-arrived miner, to endure. He had stood a silent spectator, though with indignant heart and quickened breath and pulse, during the moans of pain that were wrung from the lips of the young and suffering squaw quickened into life everything of humanity within him, and, bursting through the circle, he lifted the fallen girl to her feet, threw one arm around her trembling form for its protection, and, waving his other, said in the tones that never fail to command respect:

"Can you call yourselves men and thus treat a poor creature, and a woman?"

Hisses and jeers and laughter greeted his speech from every side, and for an instant it appeared as if he would be added to the number buried upon the rocky hillside, and, who, inquirers were told, had "died with their boots on!" But it was not so. He had proved himself a man of unflinching courage—did not quail in the least before the array of drawn revolvers and knives—held his own weapon ready for use—and the thought forced itself upon everyone present that he himself might be the first to die. His determination was made, and he was willing to accept—a conclusion not pleasant to force, and the crowd drew back and the circle widened.

"I will take this poor girl to safety," Bennett said, "and then I will return and give all the satisfaction any or all of you may desire."

He was permitted to do so, though his passage was chorused with curses, jeers and laughter. But with a firm step, with his arms still around the shrinking girl, he conducted her outside the limits of the clearing, and advised her to hasten to the wigwams of her own people.

"Ha! and you. Me no forget you, Wash-ta-do-che-mako-mas!" (good white man), she answered, raising her eyes to his face for an instant; then, drooping them she seized his hand, and kissed it impetuously, and darted away as a doe upon whose track blood-loving hounds were giving tongue.

As coolly as he had departed, Frank Bennett returned to the centre of the mushroom town to meet any consequences that might follow—to make good his proffer of satisfaction. But the episode, bloody as it might have been, appeared to have been already forgotten—was at least ignored, for the passionate men were again deep in their cups and the mysteries of monte.

For half an hour he waited—heard no comments made upon the matter, save coarse jests, and then accompanied his old friend to the little cabin they jointly occupied, at the distance of a mile away.

The conversation had brought all this vividly back to him, and he had taken the advice given—and good advice it was under the circumstances—he would have instantly departed to another locality, at least until other excitements had obliterated the one so recently enacted. But he gave no heed to the warning, smiled at the fears of his companion, and, while giving him considerable lecture homage of purpose, did not believe he stood in the least danger of being made the victim of revenge, or molested in the slightest degree.

And the events of the day banished all remembrance of the encounter from his mind. He had visited the town as was its wont—heard nothing of threats—saw no signs of hatred—in fact, discovered nothing to awaken suspicion. So when the night closed darkly around again, and he found himself alone in the cabin, his old friend being absent, as was frequently the case, it was without even a shadow of fear that he threw himself upon his rude bed, and was soon dreaming of a beautiful girl in a far-away land, with eyes blue as the heavens and bright as its stars, and hair like fine-spun gold, for whose sake—to win wealth for whom—he was leading a roving, adventurous and very far from agreeable life.

His dreams were suddenly broken. There was a slight pressure upon his forehead, a whispered word in his ear, and he sprang to his feet to find the Indian girl he had saved standing beside him, with extreme terror stamped upon every feature.

"What is the matter?" he questioned.

"You must go. The black-eyes of Jake are upon your track. They thirst for your blood."

He understood her passionate utterances, and, for an instant, resolved to remain and sell his life dearly, if it came to that. Indeed, he would have thus braved fate, had not his friend returned at the instant, showed him the mad folly of such a course, and forced him to depart.

"But where shall I go?" he asked, as he gathered his weapons.

"Come with me," answered the squaw. "You save me, me save you," and the light of gratitude shone in her eyes.

One word to his fellow white man, one wringing of the hand, and he took that of the girl, and followed her into the dark forest just as the wild shouts of the drunken rabble came ringing up through the canon.

A short walk brought them to where a horse was fastened. The squaw motioned him to mount and, as he sprang up, said in the cautious whispers of one trained in a dangerous life:

"Him wild horse. Him caught only yesterday. He take you away swift as the lightning. The Good Spirit bless you."

He would have answered, but time was not permitted. Before he could say a single word the "desert-born" was away with arrowy fleetness, and it required all his skill, nerve and strength to retain his seat in the Maseppa-like race.

For a time the rider struggled for and gained the mastery—controlled, even stopped, the headlong speed. He listened and looked eagerly down the canon, heard the shouts of the infuriated mob, and saw in flames the little cabin he had but lately deserted. For that he cared nothing if his friend only escaped injury. But the thought gave him little trouble. The old hunter would be too cunning to be trapped and smoked out like a bear in his den—would not wait for the fury of the storm to break upon him. And the Indian girl, she who had saved his life? Yes, she as well would know how to provide for her own safety, and so all of fear was banished, save as to the direction in which he was going.

"He that would tempt the war-wolf's den
May run him of his beast," came struggling up from the depths of memory at the instant, and he smiled grimly as he thought how applicable the lines were to his present situation. But time admitted of little thought. Distance was the one thing needful. Darkness was the best shield. He must use it while he could, and with the coming day he could provide for himself, be he where he might. So he loosened the rein of the struggling horse, gave him free head, and permitted him to go in what direction he chose, content in being carried away from the menacing danger of the immediate present.

It was much later in the night, much nearer the dawning of day, than he had conceived, and with the first hints of gray he found himself borne beyond the forest, to be speeding over a wide prairie upon the back of his foam-flecked, panting, but apparently tireless mustang.

Tireless? His pace was increased as the level, treeless plain began to echo beneath the hoofs that appeared to make for himself the sweetest music. His ears became more erect, his breath more swiftly and deeply drawn, his limbs to possess more vigor, his feet to more "spurn the ground," and a moment later his neigh rang out shrilly and clearly and jubilantly—the neigh as of a free steed rejoicing in his freedom—as the leader of a troop calling his mates gayly around him.

What could it mean? The faint and tired rider endeavored to restrain, if he could not stay, his course. But he might about as well have had curb within the iron jaws of a locomotive. Tug as he might, no heed was given to it. The horse had most truly become the master, and carried the rider whither he pleased, as if but a feather rested upon his strongly-ribbed back.

A violent effort—one into which all of desperate strength was thrown—the rope of rawhide that was used both as bit and bridle gave way beneath the unusual strain and sharp and incessant champing—the horse darted ahead as a suddenly released thunderbolt, and then the rider knew the cause, and the hot blood within his veins became as an ice flood!

The plain was covered with wild, fleet-footed mustangs! They welcomed their old comrade back again with more fiery but almost human joy. They wheeled, snorted, reared, stamped, whistled, surrounded, and bore him along in their frantic midst as a whirlwind—as a dark amid tempest-tossed waters—and the heart of the doomed rider shrank within him, and his very breath remained undrawn.

"So dire is the glare of their foreheads, so fearful the fire of their breath,
And the light of their eyeballs enkindled so bright with the lightnings of death;
And the foam of their mouths as the sea's when the jaws of its gulfs are as graves,
And the ridge of their necks as the wind-shaken mane on the ridge of the waves;
And their fetlocks afire as they rear drip thick with a dewfall of blood,
As the lips of the rearing breaker with froth of the manslaying flood.
For loosened the necks of thine horses and goaded their flanks with affright,
To the race of a course that we know not, on ways that are hid from our sight!"

On, a tempest of steeds and dust, they dashed, bearing the clinging, powerless rider, and indeed he knew not whither, save to a swift and terrible death. And beaten into the ground by a thousand hoofs—trampled into very dust—crushed as beneath a millstone—blotted out from all of humanity as if a mountain had fallen upon him—there would be nothing left to tell of his fate—nothing for even the sneaking wolf and foul buzzard to gloat over—not even a stain of blood for the sun to look sadly down upon.

The brain of the wretched man became dazed, dizzy, almost that of a maniac. He clapped his hands and shouted wildly. The ides seemed to have entered his brain that he was riding such a race as never before did mortal man—that he must drive on his own steed to outstrip the others. With clenched fists he beat his panting, foaming sides, were driven into the panting flanks; he shouted as with lungs of brass, and then his horse was riderless; the thousand mustangs dashed on: a whirling cloud of dust remained—and that was all!

* * *

A year later, as he held a blue-eyed and golden-haired wife upon his knee, Frank Bennett told of the matchless race he had ridden, of how he had been found by kind-hearted emigrants and snatched from the jaws of death. And with tearful eyes the young wife blessed the unknown Indian girl who had given her a husband, even though forcing him on that terrible tempest of flying teeth, dense manes, champing mouths, and the death-march of a thousand madly beating hoofs—to ride the wildest race with untamed mustangs.

HOW THE ANGEL KISSED JAKE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY DAVID A. CURTIS.

Long before the Five Points had been changed by the cutting-through of new streets, and when it was a region given over to the powers of darkness, a few earnest men and women started a Sunday-school there.

Among the dirtiest and raggedest of the children that came into the school was a little fellow named Jake. He was about seven years old, and was as wild and shy as a squirrel. When, after long persuasion, he was induced to speak, he stoutly insisted that he "hadn't got no other name" besides "Jake," and when asked what his father's name was he said he "hadn't never had no father." It further appeared that he "hadn't never had no mother," and "hadn't never had no home," and "didn't live nowhere," and "didn't do nothink."

He was one of the waifs that were then numbered by hundreds in that locality, and slept in any unoccupied hole or corner they could find, ate what ever they could steal or find among garbage, clothed themselves with whatever cast-off clothing they could find, and kept alive like weeds.

He didn't understand kindness, or, in fact, much of anything else. He stared when the teacher spoke kindly, and put up his little, dirty, half-bare arm as quick as a flash, thinking she was going to strike him when she tried to push his matted hair out of his eyes.

Having once learned the way into the schoolroom, however, he came regularly, for it was cold weather and there was no other warm room that he knew of where he could sit quietly without danger of being kicked out.

Jake was ignorant to the last degree. He knew how to curse and swear, and the fluency of his profanity astonished and shocked the teacher beyond measure when one day a bigger boy stepped on his bare toes and he did not know, and she could not make him understand, that he had done wrong—or, indeed, what "wrong" was, anyhow. He knew enough to keep out of the way of the big man in a blue coat with brass buttons, that sometimes came around the neighborhood. But that was because the other boys ran from him, not because he knew anything about the "cop's" functions. He knew enough to steal anything he could when he was hungry—and, somehow, he always was hungry. And he knew there was an old man in a cellar that would give him two or three pennies for anything he could steal. And he knew what to do with the pennies. The other boys had shown him how to pitch them. And when he had won a few, which was seldom, he knew enough to run to some dirty shop and buy something to eat, for he remembered that once when he had delayed this a bigger boy had taken away his money and "licked" him soundly besides. And he knew that if he got in the way of anybody bigger than he was, he would be kicked away unceremoniously. And that was about all he did know.

But he came every Sunday to the warm room, and listened, quietly enough, while the teacher told him, over and over again, stories that he did not in the least understand, about a little boy named Jesus that lay on the straw in a stable, and about people who brought nice things to him. But no matter how patiently or how often the teacher told him about it, she never could produce any impression on him excepting to make him wish he had a stable and some straw.

The only thing he learned was that his teacher was the most beautiful person in the world. He was certain that no one else in the world always wore beautiful clothes with no holes in them. No one else had loving eyes. No one else had hair that was always smooth and glossy. And certainly no one else ever gave him a smile that was all his own, and did not belong in any part to any other fellow.

He heard the children sing with her (he never learned to sing) songs about "angels," and in some mysterious way he found out that she was an angel herself—that was all. He never understood who God was, and so never worshiped him, but he worshiped this angel. He was too ignorant to tell her about it, and she never read it in his little stupid-looking eyes, that looked in two different ways at once, and were not close together. She was quite a long time in despair about Jake, and quite gave up the thought of making him understand anything. You see, he was so stupid that nobody ever could do that, but she persevered, being faithful, and always talked gently and kindly to him, and Jake never missed going to the warm room a single Sunday that Winter.

One day, when school was just out, Jake lingered near the door to see his teacher start for home with the little party of ladies and gentlemen that had to walk together for safety. He stood in a narrow alley-way, and as they passed he shrank back out of sight, according to his habit. Just after they had gone by, a woman came down the alley-way, and, with a torrent of curses, raised her hand to throw something at the ladies.

Jake saw her, and knew who it was. It was "Big Mary," and she was drunk. "Big Mary" almost always was drunk, so he was not surprised. He knew that she was dangerous. He had seen her fight, and one of the very few things he had learned was always to keep out of her way. But now, instead of dodging, as he would have done if she had been throwing at anybody but his teacher, he boldly struck her brawny arm with his tiny fist.

The missile fell harmless, and the woman, with fresh curses, turned and struck him a terrible blow on the head, and then walked back up the alley. The teacher turned, as he cried out involuntarily, and saw him reel across the narrow sidewalk and fall in the gutter; but she did not see the blow, and if any of the neighbors saw it they were too used to such things, and feared "Big Mary" too much to take any notice of it.

The ladies and gentlemen came back, and Jake's teacher, recognizing him, sprang forward and picked him up tenderly. He did not seem to be much hurt, although he looked stupid and dull—but, then, he always did looked stupid and dull. So, after asking him one or two questions, to which they hardly expected a reply, and got none, they left him sitting on the sidewalk, thinking he had only had a fall.

But, as they turned away, Jake's teacher seemed to think perhaps he might be hurt, and, turning back, she stooped and kissed him. As she did so she saw the only smile she had ever seen on his face, slowly break over his features.

After they had gone she sat perfectly still, and, for the first time in his life, happy. His head felt very bad, but he did not mind that. His angel had kissed him. He did not understand it, but he was not used to understanding things, and he was contented just to sit there and think about that kiss. It was the only time he had ever been kissed, so far as he knew, and to think that she should have done it was wonderful.

So he sat quietly thinking about it, and not about the pain in his head at all, when a big boy came along and kicked him into the street. There was no malice about it, and it was only one of the pleasant jokes that Jake was well accustomed to. The big boy stood laughing for a moment, waiting to see Jake get up, and hear him swear. But Jake did not get up, and the big boy was frightened and ran away, for he saw the "cop" coming around the corner.

The "cop" came and picked Jake up and inquired of two or three who had come up who he was, and how he came to be lying there; but no one knew, and so Jake was taken to the station.

When the police-surgeon saw him he said he was in a fever and must go to the hospital; so he was carried to a big room, where ever so many people lay around, each in his own bed. They all seemed like angels to little Jake in his delirium, and he bothered his kind nurse a great deal by asking continually for his angel, "the one that kissed him."

And the next day he awoke from a deep sleep and seemed for a moment to be as stupid as ever. Then a light came in his eyes, and he said: "Oh, I see so many angels!" And he seemed to be looking hard for some particular one. In a moment he closed his eyes and said wearily: "I don't see my angel, but she'll come Sunday." And he fell asleep, never to wake again in this world.

And when the teacher asked for him the next Sunday, nobody could tell her what had become of him, so she didn't know that he was waiting for his angel to join him where he had gone before.

A YOUNG WOMAN'S fancy is like the moon, which changes continually, but always has a man in it.

Back in the Old Home with Mother.
BY ANNIE M. CURTIS.

Back in the old home with mother
I shall be happy once more,
Where round the bright hearth now gather
Those I cherished of yore;
Then only kind words will greet me
Ever at morn and at night,
Fairest of faces will meet me,
Beaming by candle-light.
Chorus.—Soon will the fairest of weather
Joy to my bosom restore,
Back in the old home with mother
I shall be happy once more.

Oh, for the scenes that are dearest
Oft does my weary heart yearn:
Back to the friends that are nearest
Eagerly now do I turn;
Those that were with me in childhood
Soon will my glad eyes behold,
Rambling in valley and wildwood,
Culling the flowers as of old.
Chorus.—Soon will the fairest of weather, etc.

MY GIRL.

She is not handsome, young, or fair;
Her figure is exceeding lean;
Her features are not rich in hair,
And she has long since passed sixteen.

Her habits are not fine or neat,
Her lips are not as sweet as honey;
Her glance is not entrancing sweet;
Her sole attraction is—her money.

"Oh, Mary Jane," said I one day,
"Curl not those lips in high disdain,
Nor frown on me in such a way—
Mine is the love that shall remain.

"Those eyes, which now gaze into mine,
Outrivaling all the rainbow's tints,
Were made with love's pure ray to shine,
And—" Oh, how horridly she squints!

"That hand, which now evades my grasp—"
'Tis warty as a knotted oak—
"Should revel in a lover's clasp,
And echo what the lover spoke.

"Look down upon my state, love-lorn,
O queenly beauty of the night!"
I call her this not out of scorn,
For she's mad for when out of sight.

She turned her hideous eyes on me,
With loving grace;
'Twas such a fearful sight to see,
It would Medusa's self amaze.

Unable to withstand the glare,
With nameless terror seized, I fled,
Resolved to let Gorgons severer,
And court the lowly fair instead.

JOHN E. OWENS
As a Monologue Artist.

About 1852 John E Owens, the well-known comedian, who has since acquired much celebrity by his artistic delineation of Solon Shingle, Caleb Plummer, and other characters parts, while on a tour of pleasure in Europe witnessed Albert Smith's popular entertainment entitled "Mont Blanc," which was then attracting large audiences to Egyptian Hall, London, Eng. The entertainment consisted of a panorama of the ascent of Mont Blanc, and the lecturer or delineator, besides pointing out and describing the places of interest as they passed before the spectator, also gave character impersonations of peculiar and eccentric persons whom he met during the tour. During the entertainment the lecturer was supposed to be traveling in a diligence or stage-coach. Mr. Owens purchased of Mr. Smith a mammoth copy of the panorama which had been made for exhibition in the provinces, and a copy of the entertainment, and on his return to America gave the same style of entertainment in the Chinese Assembly Rooms, on the westerly side of Broadway, a little above Spring street, in this city, and which were last occupied for amusement purposes as Barnum's Museum, which was destroyed by fire March 3, 1868. Except during an interval in which a larger hall than the small one in the Chinese Building was being fitted up for it, Owens' "Mont Blanc" had a run in this city extending from early in April to the first week or two in September. It had been well advertised months in advance of its production at the Chinese Rooms, and its success was such as to call for consecutional exhibitions in the daytime, was also such as to provoke imitation. Consequently, there was a "Mont Blanc" in Philadelphia that Summer, wherefore the outraged comedian warned a too-confiding public that there was but one "Mont Blanc," and that he, having made the ascent thereof in company with Albert Smith, was the "original Jacobs." Subsequently Owens and his canvas and his quaint character-sketches appeared in other American cities. Thomas A. Burtt of Philadelphia, Pa., contributes an advertisement of this entertainment cut from a New York paper dated June 18, 1853, which has recalled these recollections.

A MAIDEN'S SONG.
To A. F.
BY WILLIAM D. FERRIL.

When thinking of the future,
Its distant, golden beams,
My heart is filled with rapture
And joyous, happy dreams.
Hope paints with living fingers
The fancies of my heart,
While daylight faintly lingers,
And swallows homeward dart.
Chorus.—Then softly glide—
Glide on, glide on,
Life's mimic stage, dear lover,
And list the gentle murm'ring
That haunts the distant shore.

But when the darkened shadow
Of ev'ning gathers round,
And veiled sky is all aglow
With stars in depths profound,
I pierce the future, distant
Through mazes yet unknown,
And light with colors brilliant
A pathway that's my own.
Chorus.—Then softly glide, etc.

Not lonely—there's another
Who'll journey by my side,
And swiftly down life's river
We joyfully shall glide.
Yes, love will be our pilot,
And love our only star—
With troubles, cares, and sorrow,
We'll softly glide along
Chorus.—Then softly glide, etc.

DARLING ANNIE.

To PAUL NICHOLS OF BROOKLYN.
BY T. W. HANSHEW.

Where the waterlilies grow,
And the zephyrs gently blow,
Where the waters softly flow,
Meet me, darling Annie.
When the whippowill doth call,
And the dew-drops softly fall,
While the moon shines over all,
Meet me, darling Annie.
Chorus.—When the flowers fall asleep,
And the moon shines o'er the deep,
Tell me if your heart may keep,
Then, my darling Annie.

Hearken to the turtle-dove,
Cooing from his nest above,
List'ning to the tale of love
While he sings to you, Annie.
Ah! he envies me the bliss
Of pressing such a form as this;
How he wishes he might kiss
Your sweet lips, my Annie.
Chorus.—When the flowers fall, etc.

While the little stars do shine,
Place your snowy hand in mine,
Whisper softly, "I'll be thine,"
Now, my darling Annie.
From the clouds the moonbeams break,
Show'ring silver o'er the lake,
List'ning to the vows I take
From you, darling Annie.
Chorus.—When the flowers fall, etc.

NATIONAL AMATEUR REGATTA.

The Atalantas Win the Fours and Pairs, Union Springs the Singles and Double Sculls.

The fourth annual regatta of the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen was held on the Schuylkill River mile-and-a-half straightaway course, at Philadelphia, on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, Aug. 22, 23, 24, though the wisdom of stretching over a period of three days what could easily have been accomplished without compression, and certainly with infinitely more satisfaction to the public, in two, is not apparent. It is possible that somebody may have profited by it pecuniarily, but most assuredly the Association did not, in either that or any other way. Had a wiser course been followed, there would doubtless have been a larger attendance of spectators, and the substantially-constructed and commodious grand stand would not have presented the barren appearance it unfortunately did last week. The racing, too, proved generally much less interesting than in former years, only two or three of the events being at all closely contested. This was in some degree due to the action of the Regatta Committee in debarring Ed. Smith, the noted bowman of the Argonautas, from participation in the races, on the strength of evidence with which W. R. Hills of the Beaverwycks had fortified his protest; and in refusing to remove the disability formerly declared against James H. Riley, the celebrated sculler and rising sculler of the Neptune Club who won the Senior Sculls at Saratoga handily. This action materially affected the result of each of the races, and for this reason patrons of boating, who as a rule care not whether a man is a genuine professional, a semi-professional, or pure and undefiled amateur, so long as he is a good oarsman, and they are afforded the opportunity of witnessing exciting sport, regretted the action taken by the committee, and either remained away from the meeting, or else derived little entertainment or satisfaction from attending it. The course of the committee in selecting these two men as scapegoats from amongst the number charged with being tainted with professionalism has excited considerable comment, it being held that, if they were justified in barring Smith and Riley, they would be able to advance good and sufficient reasons for shutting out some of those who did row. On the 24th the committee considered a protest sent in by the Beaverwyck Club against the eligibility of the Atalanta crew, and the following recommendation was drawn up:

This Regatta Committee recommend to the consideration of the Executive Committee of the National Association the practice, which has come to have obtained among certain clubs, of maintaining crews in training, and of defraying the training and living expenses of such for a considerable period prior to the race to be rowed by them. In the judgment of this committee this practice deserves reprobation, and the crew so maintained should be hereafter considered a hired crew.

This subject is one that the Executive Committee should dispose of, one way or the other, at their next meeting. Throughout the regatta the weather was very favorable, and the condition of the water gave no trouble from first to last. The officers were as follows: Umpire, E. D. Brickwood of The (London) Field; timekeepers, John Hockley Jr., W. B. Hills, and W. R. Thomas; referee, Dr. Dodds. Details of the races are given below, the figures preceding the names of crews indicating the position in line occupied by them, numbering from west to east:

FIRST DAY—TUESDAY, AUG. 22'.

FOUR-OARED SHELL—FIRST HEAT.

1. Atalanta B. C., New York—W. H. Downs (bow), 140lb.; H. W. Rodger, 175lb.; C. A. Lyon, 158lb.; J. E. Eustis (stroke), 150lb. 2
2. Beaverwyck R. and B. C., Albany, N. Y.—J. T. McCormick (bow), 147lb.; J. H. McEntee, 148lb.; R. T. Gorman, 160lb.; T. T. Gorman (stroke), 184lb. 1
3. Yale B. C.—C. W. Wood (bow), 154lb.; A. W. Collin, 167lb.; H. H. Kellogg, 157lb.; J. Kennedy (stroke), 160lb. 3

A little the best of a good send-off was obtained by the Atalantas, who started off with a stroke of thirty-five to the minute, which, before entering upon the last half of the race, they increased to thirty-seven, and drew farther away from their competitors, neither of whom could catch them before the winning post was reached, the New Yorkers going across the line with a clear length the best of the race. Very bad steering caused the Yales to lose considerable distance, and when opposite the end of Peter's Island they came in collision with the Beaverwycks, for which the collegians were alone to blame. The time was 9:19¾, which is not very good, and is evidence sufficient that the winners were not pushed to any extent.

FOURS—SECOND HEAT.

1. Columbia College B. C., New York—C. E. Sage (bow), 152lb.; G. Griswold, 160lb.; C. S. Boyd, 170lb.; J. T. Goodwin (stroke), 180lb. 1
2. Penn B. C., Philadelphia—H. McMillan (bow), 150lb.; F. Henderson, 160lb.; W. T. Corson; J. B. Mingus, (stroke), 150lb. 2

They were started without advantage to either crew, and kept almost abreast until the bend in the course was reached, the Columbias then showing the way, and continuing to pull in the front until the close of the contest, though a long sheer of the boat to the eastward near the end enabled the Vespers, from being over two lengths behind, to get almost up with them. The latter four did very poor steering throughout. Time, 9:18¾, the Vespers being but three-quarters of a second behind.

SINGLE-SCULL RACE—FIRST HEAT.

1. P. C. Ackerman, Atalanta..... 1
3. R. H. Robinson, Union Springs (N. Y.) B. B. C..... 2
1. C. P. Tasker, Crescent B. C., Philadelphia..... 3

They got away nicely, and first to show in front was the Atalanta representative, inside of half a mile from the start, Robinson following closely, but, though he pulled the quicker stroke, there wasn't enough muscle combined with his skill to enable him to hold his own. As for the Crescent oarsman, he had no earthly chance from the start, quickly falling to the rear, and being considerably more than a respectable distance behind when the other boats reached the goal. Time, 10:28, the second boat being twenty-seven seconds behind.

SINGLE SCULLS—SECOND HEAT.

2. C. R. Courtney, Union Springs..... 1
1. F. Pleasanton, Quaker City B. C., Phila..... 2

This race calls for no description, there being really no contest about it, and the ridiculous ease with which the famous young Union Springs sculler beat his antagonist made it look like a farce, he repeatedly stopping rowing and allowing Pleasanton to come up even and then fairly running away from him again. He won in by over a minute. Time, 10:38¾.

SINGLE-SCULLS—THIRD HEAT.

2. F. E. Yates, Union Springs..... 1
1. H. McMillan, Vesper..... 2

As in the preceding event, one of the contestants drawn for this heat did not start, the absentee being Thos. Keator of the Neptune Club of West Brighton, Staten Island, in character, too, the race was very much like that which took place immediately before, as Yates had no occasion to fully extend himself in order to lead all the way, and finally won with the utmost ease, though only half a boat's length behind at the finish, he having allowed his adversary to close up towards the end in order to make matters more interesting. Time, 10:46.

SECOND DAY—WEDNESDAY, AUG. 23.

DOUBLE-SCULL RACE.

1. Union Springs—R. B. Robinson, C. E. Courtney (stroke)..... 1
2. Atalanta—P. C. Ackerman, W. H. Rodger (stroke)..... 2
Vesper—H. McMillan, F. Wingus (stroke)..... 3

Almost as soon as the start was made did the nose of the Union Springs shell show in advance of the others, and when a couple of hundred yards had been covered open water was visible between her stern and the bow of the Atalanta, the Philadelphians thus early beginning to fall back, and soon being entirely out of it. The Atalanta men worked with a will, but though they did good rowing they failed to either overhaul the up-river boys or prevent them from widening the distance separating the boats, the Springs representatives ultimately winning an easy race in 9:26.

PAIR-OARED RACE.

3. Atalanta—W. H. Downs, J. E. Eustis (stroke)..... 1
2. Nautilus—Wm. Walsh, David Roache (stroke)..... 2
1. Argonauta R. A., Bergen Point, N. J.—W. T. Taylor, John C. Hunter (stroke)..... 3

A more beautiful start than that given could not have been secured, and for nearly an eighth of a mile there was naught to choose between them, but then the Jerseymen began to forge ahead, and it looked as if the money which had been put up upon them would not be lost. The Atalantas, however, raising the rate of their stroke, and dragging their sculls through the water in a very vigorous manner, drew upon, laid themselves level with, and then passed the leaders before one-third of the course had been left in the rear. The bowman of the Argys, in the excitement of the moment, here threw the boat into the water belonging to the Nautilus boys, who had to make a divergence also, in order to evade a collision—a piece of business which was repeated later on, eliciting a caution from the referee. Meanwhile the Atalantas, by a well-sustained spurt, had drawn themselves clear of the others, and from the way in which their shell went through the water it was evident that it would carry them the first past the post. And so it did, by several lengths, while the little Nautilus oarsmen not only succeeded in getting by Taylor and partner, but beat them to the finish line by a greater distance than they themselves were overthrown by the winning pair. Time, 10:10¾, the second boat being twenty-eight and a quarter seconds behind.

THIRD DAY—THURSDAY, AUG. 24.

SINGLE-SCULLS—FINAL HEAT.

2. F. E. Yates, Union Springs..... 1
1. P. C. Ackerman, Atalanta..... 2

Feeling confident that Yates was fully capable of upholding the reputation achieved by the Union Springs Club, Courtney, who had also won the privilege of rowing in this heat, drew out and left Frank to take care of the honors. The sequel proved that the accomplished Charles was not amiss in his calculations, for Yates went in front the moment the word was given, and a quarter of a mile away had placed himself nearly two lengths in the van. It was patent to all that the race was "his'n," and to none was this more apparent than to the leader himself, who accordingly eased up after going a half mile, pulling with only sufficient power to keep just so much space between the boats, and later on even allowing the Atalanta oarsman, who rowed a plucky stern race, to come pretty well up on him, though he went away again before the finish, just to show how easy it would have been for him to have given Ackerman a much worse beating than he let him off with. Time, 10:39, seven seconds separating the boats.

FOURS—FINAL HEAT.

2. Atalanta..... 1
1. Columbia..... 2

A very poor start was made by the college crew, who appeared to have been taken somewhat off their guard, and the catching of a crab by one of the men didn't better matters any, the Atalantas by reason of this securing a slight lead—less than half a length. The latter now headed for the west shore, intending to take their antagonist's water, though they ought to have had sense enough to know that they would not be able to pull themselves clear by the time they struck the course of the Columbias, who held straight on; consequently, within three hundred yards the oars interlocked, and that wielded by the stroke of the collegians was injured pretty badly. Capt. Goodwin held up his hand as a token that he claimed foul, and, as it was clearly a case of wrong-doing upon the part of the Atalantas, it was expected that the claim would have been allowed by the referee: but that official instead ordered that the crews be restarted and row over the course. This ruling occasioned much unfavorable comment; but from it there was no appeal, and the Columbias consented to make a fresh start, provided the broken oar was exchanged for a good one. This necessitated a delay of over an hour, when the boats were again sent off. This time the Columbias were prepared for the word, and made a capital start, getting off with a shade the best of it, but the Atalantas were even up within a hundred yards. For about five hundred yards they raced along evenly, and then the Atalantas began to draw to the front, though so slowly that at the half mile they were not much more than a quarter of a length to the good, both crews working with all their power. The Atalantas had pushed themselves nearly a length ahead by the time half the journey was completed, but on the next quarter a spurt by the Columbias enabled them to pull up a few feet, and there still seemed no chance for them to reach the goal before the crew to whose waist they were clinging with so much determination. Such was not to be the case, however, for just after flashing past the mile mark No. 3 (Boyd) was seized with dizziness, resulting from weakness caused by an attack of diarrhœa, and fell backward. He immediately raised himself and grasped his oar again with the intention of continuing, but nature refused to second his efforts, and he fell back into the arms of No. 2, the race being at an end so far as the collegemen were concerned. The Atalantas pulled ahead, completing the course in 9:36¾. Mr. Boyd was taken from the shell and placed on board the press boat as soon as possible, and, restoratives being applied, he quickly recovered from the fainting spell which had occasioned so much solicitude to his friends and others who witnessed the occurrence.

THE THAMES NATIONAL REGATTA.

This annual English regatta brought together the principal fours of the Thames and Tyne, and in view of the fact that the former, who won the championship in both fours and pairs, are to row at the Centennial regatta, the details of the racing given below will be perused with much interest.

CHAMPION FOURS.—First prize, £100 (if the funds permit, if not £80 will be given); second, £20; third, £10. Five entries.

FINAL HEAT.

Thames—W. Spencer, H. Thomas, J. Higgins, T. Green, G. Holden (cox.)..... 1
Newcastle—R. Hoppleshite, R. Bagnall, W. Lumsden, R. W. Boyd, G. Scott (cox.)..... 2
Ploughs—H. Scanes, A. G. Bishop, E. Yates, E. Moore, G. Goodrich (cox.)..... 3

Thames took the lead in the first few strokes, rowing very roughly and splashing dreadfully. Opposite Simmons' the boat was very nearly stopped by one of the crew going as near to catching a crab as he could without actual success, and this had the effect of letting up Newcastle, who rowed very cleanly from the beginning. Opposite the London boat-house the rival fours were level, and rapidly leaving the Plough crew astern; but at Bishop's Creek Newcastle took a slight lead, and there was a ding-dong race between the two all the way along by the Willows. Three hundred yards below the Point the Tyne men led by a quarter of a length, and in the next hundred and fifty yards they rapidly increased their lead, so that they became all but clear. Here their boat's head was put right round towards the Middlesex shore, and this enabled the Thames four to get up again. Below the Point, Newcastle led by rather less than half a length, but immediately on passing the bend Thames, who had now settled down to a quick though clean and steady stroke, put on a spurt, which in a few yards took them past the North-country crew—so quickly, indeed, that at the Grass Wharf Green's crew were leading by their own length. The Tyne men rowed hard, but their boat yawed about in a most extraordinary way, being scarcely straight for a dozen strokes together, and necessarily, under such circumstances, independent of anything else, their chance now became hopeless, the Thames men keeping on at a lively rate to the finish, and winning by two lengths, about 150 yards separating the third from the second crew.

CHAMPION PAIRS.—First, £50; second, £5.

FIRST HEAT.

Thames—T. Green and H. Thomas..... 1
Newcastle—R. Bagnall and R. W. Boyd..... 2

This was the race of the day, and there was considerable speculation on the result, and when the crews had rowed such a fine race at the recent Manchester Regatta, the Tyne men winning by two lengths; but the Thames men looked wonderfully fit, and, going away with the lead and rowing magnificently, at the Soap-works they were half a length in front. This they increased opposite Dorset Villa, where Boyd caught a crab to nearly a length; and, although they steered rather badly and nearly fouled a barge, retained their advantage to the end, easing at the finish, and winning by a good length. The Tyne men did not row so well together as their opponents, and appeared to have a difficulty in keeping their boat straight, Boyd pulling the stronger of the two.

SECOND HEAT.—W. Spencer and J. Higgins..... r. o.
THIRD HEAT.

Thames—T. Green and H. Thomas..... 1
Thames—W. Spencer and J. Higgins..... 2

As the two pairs were pulling in the same boat in the fours, it is needless to say that little interest was taken in the affair. Immediately after the start it was seen that Spencer was utterly unable to hold his partner, and by the time the boat-houses were reached Green and Thomas were over two lengths ahead. The remainder of the journey needs no description. Green and Thomas eased at the finish, and were content with beating their friends by a length.

From the Thames the Southern crew went to the Irwell, where, on Aug. 5, 7, 9, they participated in the Manchester and Salford Regatta. They took first prize, £70, in the race for the Pomona Champion Prizes, for four-oared boats with coxswains, open to the world, beating the Eilesmere crew, in the first heat, rowing over in the second heat of the second round, and defeating their rivals from Gateshead-on-Tyne in the final. In the latter both crews went away at a rare pace, and rowed on even terms to the buoys, where Thames gained a slight lead, which they held in the finish winning by three-quarters of a length. The Trafford Park Stakes, for pair-oared boats, did not result so favorably for them, as they secured only second prize, £5, the first, £50, being taken by Boyd and Bagnall, who defeated the Thames Club in the first heat, outrowed Spencer and Higgins in the first heat of the second round, and defeated Thomas and Green in the final pull. The Gateshead crew quickly passed their opponents, and, rounding the buoys a length in front, won easily by four lengths. Spencer and Higgins and Hepplewhite and Nicholson divided third and fourth prizes. Higgins was placed on scratch in the scullers' race —the Pomona Championship Handicap; prizes £70, £20, £7, £3—for which there were numerous entries. He easily defeated Ralph Hepplewhite of Gateshead by four lengths in the semi-final. Blackburn was beaten in the third heat of the second round by C. Campbell, to whom he conceded fourteen lengths, more than he could make up by a length and a quarter. Spencer (5 yards off) and Green (3½ yards) were also beaten, the winner of the prize being T. Black-man (4¾ yards), and W. S. Marshall taking second.

TORONTO ROWING CLUB.—The annual regatta of the above Canadian Club was held on Toronto Bay Aug. 12. The opening event was a scullers' race for the champion belt and $25, the winner to hold the belt against any final challengers for one year, and receive $25 upon returning it to the club. It was a two-mile open race, and was won by E. Hanlon, defeating W. McKin. An amateur scullers' race followed, same course, for a silver cup and a silver medal. It was carried off by J. Hills, which defeats of the Double-scull lapstreak inrigged boats figured in the next contest, which was for two silver cups and as many silver medals, same course. The contest resulted in favor of J. W. Rutherford and Colclaughs, J. Taylor and E. Hanlon coming second. A fishermen's race followed, for fishing boats in actual use this Summer, three pairs of sculls, $20 and $10, same course. It was won by E. Hanlon, W. McKin, A. Elliott (stroke); G. Gough, W. Montgomery, W. Ward (stroke); second; P. Gray, F. Smith, J. Carroll (stroke), third. Four-oared race, in lapstreaks, followed, three miles, for four silver cups and a like number of silver medals. The victorious four were G. F. R. Harris, W. H. Perram, W. M. Richards, E. Lamb (stroke), C. D. Ryerson, G. M. Burns, G. Moffat, H. Beamon (stroke), second; G. P. Elliott, C. Calleghan, J. Henderson, V. Sankey (stroke), third. A yawl race was won by J. Muir, J. Ryan, J. O'Neil and J. Rodden, who by this victory became $25 richer. A swimming-match, 200 yards, resulted in a victory for W. Tredwell, T. Tinning second; and another of 500 yards was taken by the same man, V. Sankey second.

A. T. STEWART of Portland, Me., and T. C. Butler of Boston, Mass., rowed for $200 on Lake Sebago, Me., Aug. 15. The distance was over two miles, one Stewart won in 17:36, eleven seconds before Butler, who charged Stewart with jockeying him.

BASEBALL.

HARTFORD vs. BOSTON.

The seventh game of the championship series between the above clubs was contested at Hartford, Ct., Aug. 21. The game, though somewhat one-sided, was interesting, and resulted in the success of the home team. The Hartfords went first to the bat, and Remsen, on a base-hit by himself, and another by Ferguson, with good base-running, earned a run. The Bostons in their half scored an unearned run, Wright got to base on a three-base hit, and scored on a base-hit by Leonard, assisted by a wild throw by Remsen to third to cut him off. In the third inning the Hartfords piled up five unearned runs, Remsen making a two-base hit, and Cary and York singles, and Brown, Manning, Murnan and Wright making errors. In the fifth the Bostons earned a run on safe hits by Schafer, Wright and Leonard. A two-baser by Mills and singles by Remsen and Burdock, with a muff of a grounder by Morrill, gave Hartford their two runs in the sixth—neither of which was earned, as chances had been given to retire the side before the hits were made. The Hartfords then scored two earned runs in the eighth on singles by York and Allison and a three-baser by Mills. The Bostons also earned two in the eighth, safe hits by O'Rourke, Murnan and Schafer, coupled with fine base-running, doing the work.

They met again on the following day, at the same place, when the Reds were successful, the game being very poorly played. In the second inning a single base-hit by Manning, with three errors by Ferguson and one each by Mills and York, gave three unearned runs. The Hartfords in the third, on single hits by Burdock and Remsen, and errors by Leonard, Schafer (two) and Brown, scored three runs. Boston's only fair-foul hit by Murnan and two errors by Ferguson gave Schafer a life at first, and subsequently a run. The seventh won the game for Boston, Wright making a three-base hit and Leonard a two-baser, and Carey and York errors, which resulted in two runs. Hartford scored their last two in the eighth on Schafer's error and a single hit by Remsen and a two-baser by Higham.

CHICAGO vs. ST. LOUIS.

The seventh contest of the series between the Chicago and St. Louis Clubs took place at St. Louis, Mo., Aug. 21, in the presence of about six thousand people. In the last inning Delaney made the winning play, a muff of Cuthbert's which rolled over his foot as he ran in. The Chicagos made a claim of intentional obstruction, which the umpire would not allow. The Chicagos left the field, and the game was given to the Browns by a score of 9 to 0.

STAR vs. EAGLE.

The Stars of Farmington, N. H., and the Eagles of Exeter met in a match for the State championship on the grounds Aug. 19, the Stars winning. The grounds were quite a holiday aspect, a large concourse of spectators being present. Play was called at half-past one. At the end of the eighth inning the score was a tie, each side having made 6 runs. The Stars had the bat, and two men were already out, when a costly overthrow by Folsom gave them a commanding lead, and also the game, as the Eagles were blanked. Score, 9 to 6. For the home nine, the catching of Ayer was a feature, he putting out eight men and assisting in seven times. In the first inning he took a foul-tip in magnificent style. The pitching of Hyde was very effective; eleven times the Eagles failed to hit the ball. The fielding of the nine in general was excellent. Hyde led at the bat. For the visitors, Hardin, being disposed, and, withal, having no suitable catcher, pitched at only moderate speed, and, although batted freely at times, was singularly effective and showed sterling abilities. The outfield made some brilliant catches. Rice did the best batting.

THREE WEEK LETTERS in the Detroit (Mich.) Post-office on Aug. 24, 25, 26, 28, claims of the San Francisco Minstrels, and (4) for Frank B. Dobson.

INTRODUCTORY OVERTURE.

MONDAY, Aug. 28, '76.

Whether the late lamented William Shakespeare, Esq., is to have an abiding-place in New York seems likely to be settled during the dramatic season we are just entering upon. There was a time—but that was in the never-to-be-forgotten days of the "old Park pit"—when the great Bard of Avon could hold up his head, pure and simple, on the strength of his own merits; and the dear public, ever confiding, ever relying on the genius of the divine one, would crowd those temples of high art where William's productions were presented to their notice, and sup full of the beauties of language developed by accessories, before and after the fact, composing "the full strength of the company." Then King Lear could go down to the silent tomb without the aid of calcium lights to make the gloomy path more cheerful. And the "lovers of the legitimate" would smile with satisfaction as they beheld the hoary-headed old King a-tottering to his fall without the aid of a corps de ballet, and beautiful angels a-waving his weary and perturbed spirit to the regions of blissful repose. Then, too, the melancholy Dane had it all his own way, and could cut and slash and tear things to tatters like he was a lunatic just escaped from the dungeons of some sympathetic hospital. Aye, indeed, the dreadful Hamlet had the privilege of getting up his sideboard without the aid of that paraphernalia which hedges in the players' scene in the modern style of doing the play. And the ghost had to be rather particular how he carried his head in those times, otherwise he would have a new head put upon him, right "in the presence of the spectators." And what shall we say of the ancient "bloody Duke of Gloster?" Gore was his motto, and gore was his aim, and no man to make him afraid. My, my! how the elder Booth did play the part! Gosh! He put off Booth at the wings, and became Richard himself, again and again. No tight-rope for Richard to balance himself upon before engaging in the fray at Bosworth Field; no sending-and-dance, no sero-comic specialties, to enliven the tent scene at "dead of night, when half the world was in a solemn darkness hung," and Gloster was "a-dreaming the happy hours away" all by himself. None of that kind of artificiality to make the scene go off properly. No, indeed; each ghost showed up as a ghost, pale and sad, and bloody, and each one had his or her own little say-not, mind you, to tantalise and scare Richard, but to solemnly impress upon him the error of his ways, and to implore him to "pull down his vest" before the unpleasantness of the morrow—and then each and every one of that pale-faced constituency was waited along on a float which carried them to the end of their journey, where a flagon of good old ale awaited them. And when Mr. Booth was awakened from his terrible dream, didn't he look just like a man who has had the nightmare born of lobster, watermelon, clams, corned-beef and cabbage, lemonade, pork and beans, and lager-beer? Yes, indeedy; why, if we hadn't known the great actor to be a member of the total-abstinence society, we should have had no hesitation in pronouncing him legitimately "indisposed." And when he caught sight of Richmond! Dear, dear, how he eyed him! We shall never forget that scene till our born days. He crouched around him as if measuring his adversary's height and weight in his stocking feet. And there's no use of trying to deny it, but Richmond was always afraid of Booth; and, notwithstanding the former had the law on his side, you could see that the prestige of the King's name was a tower of strength, which made the other man weaken, as it were, before a blow was struck, notwithstanding his words were bold, and his bearing was commendable under the circumstances. When Mr. Booth peeled for the fray, and sharpened the keen edge of his trusty steel upon the stage, it just made the spectators as quiet as a mouse. You could hear a man drop if he dared breathe above a whisper during that soul-stirring scene. We do not wish to be understood as saying that the Richmonds of those days were cowards in the presence of Mr. Booth. By no means. In good sooth, they were fearless in the abstract, so to speak, but the knowledge that Mr. Booth had been known to clean his adversary clear off the stage, and into the street—yes, "out in the street"—dampened their ardor, and made them hesitate ere plunging into what might be a realistic deadly emeute. You didn't see any audience wrapped in sleep at that dreadful moment. Every man, and every woman, and every child was wide awake, with eyes distended and body thrust forward, so that no motion, no word, should be lost? There was no shouting "Give it to him, Gloster!" "Go in, Richmond!" There wasn't a sound among the audience. You might have thought they had all been put to sleep by a female spiritualist. When their souls met, and for a moment, they seemed magnetized, that was a moment which will last till the crack of doom, if we are not greatly mistaken. Then came the "dreadful lay." They went in as if they meant business, and their three up and two down, and vice versa, froze people to their seats, as we might say, so realistic was everything. Now Mr. Booth would get the upper hand in the fight, and now Richmond would be on top. They fought all over the ring for full half an hour, and when the bloody Duke got sent to grass all of a heap, did he give up the fight, and cry for quarter? Not he, indeed! With prostrate form, and the life's blood ebbing from numerous wounds, Mr. Booth waltzed around, and defied his foe in the very jaws of death. Now, mind you, all this is terrific combat was had without the stage being filled with prima-donnas assolutas and corypheos and ballet girls all in a row. They just had a fair field and no favor, and when Gloster received his death-wound he looked so sad and lonesome that you felt a true inwardness for Mr. Booth, of which he was not conscious, and grieved to see him writhe so. His death scene and last dying speech were evidences of that genius which was born with him and which died with him. His death throes—equaled by few and excelled by none—were truly awful. Like any other man, he didn't want to die; good and pious ministers of the gospel shake in their shoes when they come to shuffle off this mortal coil—why, then, should we expect Mr. Booth to pass off the stage of life as if he liked it? Truly, why? With the vital sparks a-leaving his mortal frame, he would make a desperate effort, rise upon his pins and lunge out his dexter mawley at the phantom of Richmond, but, mon, that was the last, flickering ember that let out his life, and then the light and life went out together. They didn't fill the gory scene with colored fires, as is done nowadays; nor did the orchestra play "Sweet Spirit, Hear My Prayer," as is done in modern times. Ah, no; ah, no! They let him die in the solemn gloom of midnight, and the audience departed to their homes sorrowfully, fully impressed with the wonderful magnetism of Mr. Shakespeare's writings and Mr. Booth's acting. Many of the old Park pitites would stand in front of Windust's and talk over what they had seen and heard; others would go to their nightly rest and close their souls with something soothing; while others would go down to Butter-cake Dick's, and while taking in their coffee and cakes—price six cents for all—they would talk about the great American tragedian, hoping he might live forever, and so forth. We have really forgotten what we started to say, but no matter, it is a light of other days, nor have we any idea what our purpose was in dragging Shakespeare upon the scene, for he seems to have outlived his usefulness, notwithstanding his works do live after him. It is possible that we intended to point a moral and adorn a tale when we breathed the name of William, but we have forgotten it, and so must let the tale rest where it is, and proceed with the revels.—ED.]

.....The calls that weekly appear in our columns are welcome to the professional, for they are the roll-calls that tell of the beginning of business and that give promise of the ball to come. And yet this "Variety Dramatic" visits our roll calls that no actor ever let go unheeded. And talking about one Booth reminds us of another; and so, when a lady's in the case, let our poetic machine do the

HONORS OF THE PLAY.

At Booth's ball and lordly Bangs
The revel leads with crown and cup:
While unto nature Agnes Booth
Doth nobly "hold a Myrtle up!"

[See? Holds the myrtle up to nature, as we might say.—ED.]..... An unsuccessful "Black Crook" manager asserts that he never performed Zamiel in that spectacle, although he has played the devil with it!.....Another accident on the trapeze? Yes, we know all about it, and, Jarley, believe you mean well in your suggestion for the relief of the sufferer, but bone-set tea is not used for patients with broken limbs!.....And in this connection we would kindly ask the dear reader why applause is like a fish? Because actors frequently find it at the end of their "line!"

.....There seems to have been quite a little controversy between those whom it may concern touching the recent pronunciamento of the combined managers. Apprehensive that some people may have been misled by the discussion, we would take advantage of this opportunity to say that the managers who object to "middle men" are not those in the minstrel business, who only call up the combinations, and one, particularly, of a "single pair." Jimmy, give her a drop or two of oil, and turn the crank. "Solem stranes, or lively mude?" It isn't anybody's funeral, James; so don't set her in a minor key. "Let her go!" Yes.

THE NEW COMBINATION.

"I've got a new partner," said Walters;
"I'm as jolly as I can be—
I can carry out as last as I please at night,
For I always have Mr Ker-r!"

.....Circus men complain that the Presidential canvass is interfering with their canvas, which they find difficult to keep full this season. Some circus followers don't find any trouble in keeping "full." This is hard on some people. And this recalls to mind the fact that jugglers are an upright sort of people, notwithstanding they are never without a "ball." And, though they likewise swallow swords as a steady diet, they are never found at swords' points with one another. When they "juggle a ball" it is for their own good; but when a professional ball-player "juggles a ball," himself and companions are the sufferers. It's all circus, though. And while upon this all-absorbing subject, it may not be in contravention of the laws of prudence and propriety to turn to James and his own reliable Bachina for some time suitable to this occasion. Jimmy, can she stand another go? "If she can't, I kin!" She's as good as wheat, James, if she is handled tenderly. "I like her best when coming through the rye. Here's towards yer."

IN A JUG-U-LAR VEIN.

"A jug of beverage is a dangerous thing—
Why did you such an errand send me on?
I know that I got tight; but demme, John,
Please lay the damage on the demijohn."

CITY SUMMARY.

In Memoriam.

MRS. HENRY COCK.
BY ADAM H. HOWARD.

She has gone—but who will think of her without a starting tear?
So lady, so youthful loveliness, we felt her presence near;
Her slender form, of fairest mould, can we not see it still,
And hear her sweet and gentle tones, like the voice of Summer rill?

Silence reigns in her lonely home—it thrills the heart with pain,
And we will miss her from each spot where she ne'er may come again.
The music of her merry voice seems ling'ring on our ear,
Only to fill our hearts with woe—its sounds we cannot hear.

Oh! can it be that this is life, a thing so frail as this?
Like a lovely flower that only smiles to give one thought of bliss,
That blooms in light and beauty, a fleeting Summer day,
Then closes up its sweetness, and passes thus away?

Farewell! Too soon the light is quenched that shone so sweetly here—
But oh, since love of God was thine, it glows in a brighter sphere,
Now flames amid the seraph band in joyful, endless day.

HARRY SPRIGGS, Minnie Farrell, Harry and Lottie Macarthy, Buckley and Winnett, the Gorman Brothers, H. A. Darley and Minnie Dewitt, and Henrietta Mollenhauer were the fresh people at the Parisian Varieties the past week. Harry Spriggs acted Jake in a sketch called "The Forged Will;" Minnie Farrell sang character-songs, and later gave songs-and-dances; Lottie Macarthy was heard in serio-comic vocalisms, and later with Harry Macarthy performed a musical sketch called "Ireland and America." The last-named also gave his entertainment called "Lights and Shades of Everyday Life," in which he was seen in a number of fresh character impersonations, and sang several fresh songs and introduced some clever dancing. Buckley and Winnett gave their specialty, entitled "Music on the Brain," performing upon a number of instruments. The three Gorman Brothers danced a statue-clog in an agile manner, and subsequently were seen as "The Alabama Triplets;" H. A. Darley in a German character; and Minnie Dewitt as an Irish girl in a musical sketch entitled "Bound for Germany" appeared to advantage; Miss Mollenhauer sang the freshest songs of her repertory, and dancing by Mlle. Bertha; male character-songs by Minnie Hall; some tableaux vivants and the sketch of "Preolove Contretemps" filled out the bill.

KATE FISHER and her horse Wonder were the stars at Wood's Museum last week, attracting a good attendance. "Lady Godiva" was acted during the week, and on Thursday evening and thereafter "Jack Sheppard" was performed with it. Miss Sophia Miles was the star at the matinees, acting in "Aurora Floyd."

E. LAMB, F. Bennett, C. Bainbridge, Annie Deland and Alice Wyndham are to make their first appearances at Daly's Fifth-avenue Theatre Aug. 28, acting in "David Garrick." "Rose" is in rehearsal and will be produced there Sept. 4.

CHARLES BACKUS of the San Francisco Minstrels is to lead to the altar Miss Tizzie Mason of Niagara Falls, in Philadelphia, Pa., on Oct. 15.

MANAGER BEN DE BAR left town for St. Louis, Mo., Aug. 25.

BARTLEY CAMPBELL, the well-known dramatic author, and S. W. Piercey sailed for England in the steamship bearing the latter name on Aug. 26.

MANAGER JOHN T. FORD of the Baltimore and Washington theatres was in town last week.

THE SAN FRANCISCO MINSTRELS are to inaugurate their twelfth consecutive season in this city this evening, Aug. 28.

"OUR AMERICAN COUSIN" was withdrawn from the stage of the Fifth-avenue Theatre after the performances of Aug. 26. It attracted a good average attendance. This evening Mr. Sothern will appear in the title character of "David Garrick."

MISS EMMA WEATHERBEE has been engaged to play the principal role in "Baba" at Niblo's Garden, which is to open about Sept. 18.

KYNOCK AND SMITH and Kelly and Ryan were the fresh appearances at the Theatre Comique on Aug. 21. The first-named couple gave exhibitions of their skill in using roller skates, which elicited the customary marks of approbation. Kelly and Ryan, who appeared together for the first time here, achieved quite a success in their Irish character songs-and-dances. They were first seen as "Mr. and Mrs. Malone," then as "Pat and Judy," and finally as the grotesque "Hod-carriers." Edward Harrigan, in character, sang a song entitled "Mr. Levy of Shatham Street." Tony Hart, attired as a ballet-dancer, sang "Dancing in the Ballet," and together they gave a duet called "The Actors," all of which were new and favorably received. They also acted the leading characters in the closing dramatic sketch called "Darby and Lanty," which was from Mr. Harrigan's pen, and was performed for the first time. Miss Adah Richmond sang a new song written by Mr. Harrigan, music by David Braham, entitled "Going Abroad with Pa." Besides these, John Williams gave Lancashire clog-dances; the company of boys repeated "The Ginger Blues;" Quilter and Goldrich gave a burlesque magical performance, introducing the aerial suspension trick; Alice Bennett sang fresh songs; Billy Carter introduced among his banjo-songs one descriptive of "A Day on Coney Island." The sketches of "A Mother-in-law" and "The Coming Man" filled out the bill, and introduced Larry Tooley, J. A. Graver, D. Barclay, G. W. H. Griffin, Ada Boshell and Hannah Birch. A good business has been done.

HONEY BOWERS, who gave the freshest of his own songs-and-dances; Miss Blanche Correlli, a good vocalist, who quickly established herself as a favorite; Sheridan and Mack in their German musical sketches; and Hogan and Lord, song-and-dance performers of ability, were the additions to the variety company at the Olympic Theatre last week; and Mr. R. Grismer, Miss Nichols, H. Pierson, J. C. Walsh, and the Misses Phosa McAllister and Florence Ellis, dramatic performers, made their first appearances, acting in the closing sketch, called "The Storm Signal." The entertainments also included the gymnastic feats of Curry and Fox on horizontal bars; songs by Lena Rivers; songs-and-dances by the Richmond Sisters; cornet solos by little Tommy Fish; Irish character songs and dancing by John Rielly; banjo songs by Sam Devere; feats of equilibrium on the slack wire by Louise Boshell; a burlesque lecture by Add Ryman; and musical performances on various instruments by J. D. Kelly. Business good.

E. K. COLLIER so completely concealed his personal identity in impersonating the character of Arbaces in "Sardanapalus" at Booth's Theatre that no one could speak of his performance last week, fearing that on the night we were present some other person had been temporarily substituted for him. This is the greatest compliment that can be paid to an actor, and it speaks loudly in favor of a painstaking young man, who has made his way comparatively short time before the public, and who is taking rapid strides in his profession. The attendance at this theatre continued large during the expired week.

THE ORRIN BROS. arrived in the city from San Francisco, Cal., Aug. 27.

THE ANNOUNCEMENT of the programmes rendered at Gilmore's Garden during the past week, and the successful execution of numbers, severely classical in form, as Beethoven's "Consecration of the House," have made the concerts of the past few days musically notable ones. Mme. Pappenheim, W. H. Stanley, the Young Apollo Club, Dr. Gustave Satter, the pianist who made his first appearance here, and a successful one, during the past week; Levy, Arbuckle, Bracht and the other soloists of the band have all come in for a share of praise for their conception and execution of the more difficult forms of composition, recently presented. In conjunction with the musical programme given by the band and its several soloists before mentioned, the management announce a horticultural show to take place Sept. 19, 20, 21, 22, under the auspices of the N. Y. Horticultural Society.

MUSICAL NOTES.—A number of the members of Theo. Thomas' Orchestra, all excellent solo players, gave a concert on Aug. 26 at Steinway Hall, which preceded Society, an organization composed of the instrumental musicians of the city. The numbers selected were of a high class, severely classical in style, that put the abilities of the artists engaged to the utmost test, and the renditions given were in no case disappointing. They offered ample evidence of musicianly excellence, meriting the approval of a most critical audience. The first number on the bill, a quartet by Beethoven, was interpreted in admirable form by Messrs. A. Eller, Jos. Eller, H. Kayser, H. Schmitz and R. Reuter. A solo for the violin, with orchestra accompaniment, cleverly defined by R. Arnold; and this and Jos. Eller's illustration on the cornu Anglais of Stigelli's simple and melodious solo "The Tear," were two of the most effective efforts of the concert. A septette by Feska closed the bill, and received an excellent exposition from Messrs. A. and Jos. Eller, Arnold, Reuss, Schmitz, Steinecke and Barether. The concert, from an artistic point of view, was one of the most worthy that have been given in this city, and very creditable to the society..... Wagner's "Flying Dutchman" is underlined for an early production in this city by the Pappenheim Troupe, under the management of Mr. Grau..... Eastlake, an eminent Russian pianist, is under engagement to appear at Chickering Hall during the Fall season.....Emily Soldene and her troupe of opera-bouffe artists are to return to us in a few weeks and present a season of Anglicized opera bouffe, under C. A. Chizzolo's management..... Mme. Camilla Urso is to appear in "Martha" at Terrace Garden Theatre Sept. 1, opening the operatic season at this house, under H. Grau's management.

THE THIRD-AVENUE THEATRE opened for the season, Saturday evening, Aug. 26, under the management of B. W. Hitchcock, assisted by James Vincent, as stage-manager, and Prof. Meyering leader of the orchestra. The upper portions of the auditorium were densely crowded, while the lower floor was comfortably filled. All of the persons who took part in the entertainments had been previously seen in this city, and they quickly secured the favor of those present. The programme opened with a minstrel first-part, during which "My Dream of Love is Oe'r" was sung by the quartet; "The Weeping Willow," by James Quinn; "Jennie with the Light-brown Hair," by William Dwyer; "There's Room Enough for All," by Harry Hart; and the finale by E. D. Gooding, James Quinn, Tony Hart and company. The orchestra then played an overture, after which a variety olio was given, which included songs-and-dances by Dollie Warren, among them "Grimes' Cellar-door;" acrobatic feats by the Victorelli Brothers; songs-and-dances by Healy and Conway; Rickey and Barney in their sketch entitled "Down Rehearsal," in which they were supported by Sam Ryan, James Vincent, E. D. Gooding, Harry Leslie and Miss Bessie Warren; songs by Edna Markley; a triple statue clog by Healy, Conway and Ella Saunders; a stump oration by Harry Hart; Sheridan and Mack in their sketch "Who Put Benedict in the Outside Cr?" a ballet pantomime entitled "The Brigand Chief," which introduced Ida Devere, principal dancer, and a ballet corps. Matinees are to be given Wednesdays and Saturdays.

AN ALMOST entirely new company is announced to perform this week at the Olympic Theatre. The fresh people are Orrin Brothers, Mlle. Cecile La Comte, John Cottrell, the Freeman Sisters, Master Martin, Robert Butler, Bob Hart, Little Mac, Walters (late of Walters and Morton) and (Andy) McKee, the Poole Brothers, D. T. Corrie, Louis Mestayer, Julia Parker and George H. Wite.

THE BIJOU THEATRE opened for the season on Saturday night, Aug. 26, the stock company acting in "The Flowers of the Forest" and "The Irish Lion." This week George C. Boniface, a great local favorite, and his daughter, Miss Stella, will be the stars. They will perform the chief characters in A. Pirou's drama entitled "An American's Golden Rule."

CHARLES CALVERT, who came hither from England to supervise the production of "Sardanapalus" at Booth's Theatre, is to sail for home on Wednesday. He is advertised to address the audience at Booth's Theatre on Tuesday evening.

M. O'Brien, Lazelle and Maffit, and a new sketch called "The Sons of Temperance," written by Edward Harrigan, with the music arranged by David Braham, are the novelties announced for this week at the Theatre Comique.

THE AIKEN COMBINATION, in "Taming a Goose" and "The Molly Maguires," is the star attraction this week at Wood's Museum.

CHARLES and Lotta Gray, Horace Weston and the Milton Brothers reinforce the company at the Parisian Varieties Aug. 28.

CLAUDE DE HAVEN is to be the advertising agent of Tony Pastor's New Theatre the coming season.

BARNUM'S CENTENNIAL SHOW will exhibit for a short season, in Gilmore's Garden, commencing in October next.

R. E. STEVENS is to leave this city on Aug. 29 for Indianapolis, Ind., to arrange preliminaries for the opening of his season there Sept. 11.

MILTON NOBLES, T. J. Nolan, W. A. Whitecar, Mr. Losee, Minnie Doyle, Fannie Lewis Burt and Miss Elberts arrived from Bermuda, W. I., in the steamship Canima Aug. 27.

JOHN SPEAR was added to the company of Kelly & Leon's Minstrels on Aug. 21, and met with a favorable reception in his character-vocalisms. There were no other changes in the bill. The English version of Offenbach's comic opera entitled "Mons. Choufleuri at Home" continued one of the chief attractions at the Arcadia Garden, which is to open Aug. 28, in the Aquarium, at the corner of Thirty-fifth street and Broadway. A channel was quickly dug, which prevented damage to valuable property in close proximity.

DRAMATIC.

To Correspondents.

All persons holding credentials as correspondents of THE CLIPPER are requested to return them to this office for renewal before Sept. 1. Applicants for the position of correspondent not receiving any reply are politely requested to consider silence a negative.

THE FIFTH-AVENUE THEATRE COMPANY appeared in Bridgeport, Ct., Aug. 24, under the management of Frank M. Chapman, in "Pique," to an overflowing house. Virginia Buchanan as Mabel Renfrew, Stella Congdon as Raitch and Eliza Gleasford as Mary Standish, deserve favorable mention for meritorious efforts; also W. H. Hamilton and Ed. Chapman as Matthew Standish and Sammy Dimple. Route: Trenton, N. J., 28, New Brunswick 29, Paterson 30, Elizabeth 31, Newark Sept. 1, 2.....Harry Holmes, who was in the stock company last season at the Richmond (Va.) Theatre, and who is now connected with the George Hotel, a popular seaside resort near Bridgeport, Ct., was the recipient of a benefit at that place on Aug. 26, at the hands of the following friends: J. N. Bears of the Providence Opera-house Company, Billy Styles, Geo. H. Treat, Jos. T. Bayley and others of the Bridgeport Minstrels, in their specialties; besides several guests of the hotel, in songs, recitations, etc. The affair was a pleasant as well as a decided success. Letter of Aug. 26.

DATES for Kate Fisher in her new spectacle of "Lady Godiva" can be secured through Col. T. Allston Brown, as per card.

J. J. SULLIVAN, manager of the Katie Putnam Company, publishes his address in our business department.

ELLA LEAVITT, star actress, is prepared to fill time during the coming season. Address G. W. Kates, manager, as per advertisement.

H. J. EAVES, costumer, is prepared to hire complete dresses for a number of plays mentioned in his card elsewhere.

MACAULEY'S THEATRE, Louisville, Ky., is to be opened for the season Sept. 11.

CALL.—The ladies and gentlemen engaged for Frank R. Aiken's company are requested to report at the Hamilton Opera-house, Wheeling, W. Va., Sept. 7. The season opens Sept. 11.

THE FUNERAL SERVICES of Mrs. Annie Kemp Bowler, whose untimely demise was chronicled in our last issue, took place on Aug. 23, at Grace Episcopal Church, Twelfth and Cherry streets, Philadelphia, Rev. Dr. William Suddards performing the beautiful and impressive rites of the Episcopal Church. There were present an unusually large number of members of the theatrical profession and friends. The coffin was placed in the centre aisle of the church, and it was entirely covered with flowers of every hue and fragrance. A floral lyre with broken strings was contributed by the mother of the deceased; a large cross by Mr. Ransom Rogers, the proprietor of the New National Theatre; a large lute from Mrs. John Drew; a large cross, bearing the name of "Annie," from Mr. Robert Fox; a large harp from the company at Kiralfys' Alhambra Palace; and an anchor and other floral offerings from the New National Theatre company. Many were other beautiful designs contributed by personal friends. The pallbearers were Messrs. Harry Lacy, W. H. Powers, Horace Lewis and A. B. Kennedy. As the pallbearers were carrying the remains out of the church, Mme. Salvotti sang "The Rock of Ages," and the New National Theatre orchestra, Prof. C. Kaufman leader, performed a solemn dirge. The remains were taken to Mount Morish Cemetery, the grave being in the lot of the Actors' Order of Friendship, the permit therefor being kindly granted by Mr. W. H. Turner, the secretary of that excellent Order.

H. A. KENDALL, supported by Messrs. W. J. Hurley, Henry Bussell, C. E. McDermith, T. G. Rothwell, Charles Howard, John Brown, Geo. M. Dumond, C. M. Thomas, E. A. Leo, A. C. Holt, Frank Thompson,

CINCINNATI VARIETY NEWS to Aug. 26 is furnished as appended by our correspondent: "The National Theatre Comique opened its regular Fall and Winter season under the management of E. M. Witter on Aug. 12. During the Summer recess the building has been refitted and repainted, a new stage has been put in, and a new drop-curtain painted. An immense house was present on the opening evening, and business has been large since. The vaudeville embraced the efforts of Eloise Allen, a good balladist; the Hassan Sisters, fair song-and-dance artists; Charles Diamond in song-and-dance and harp solos; the Claire Sisters in contortion acts, and afterwards Maggie Claire in her excellent flying-ring act; Goss and Fox, the well-known popular song-and-dance artists; John McVeigh in Ethiopian specialties; the Suydam Brothers in a clever acrobatic exhibition; and Murphy and Mack, a brace of capital Irish specialists. Murphy and Mack and Eloise Allen closed on the 19th, but are to reappear on the 28th. The concluding dramatic feature this week was 'The Trapper's Last Shot,' with John M. Murray as the star. The play was well presented, and Mr. Murray received creditable support from the stock company, which is a fair one. The departures on the 26th are Suydam Brothers, to Cleveland; Goss and Fox and Claire Sisters, to Indianapolis; and the Hassan Sisters, to Akron. To open on the 28th: The Phoites, Ida Carlisle, M. and Cora Austin, Huber and Glidden, Herr Schultze, Barlow Brothers and W. H. Schneider. Chas. McDonald is director of amusements.....At Heuck's Hall, under the management of Jas. Douglas, formerly of the National, a pleasing programme is presented to a good business. The performance consists of Prof. Chas. Robertus, in acts of prestidigitation; Annie Braddon, in serio-comic songs-and-changes; Dick Devlin, in Irish songs and dances; the Herd Sisters, in musical sketches; James Douglas, in songs; the Morosco Family, in acrobatic feats; and H. Victorelli and Young Eldon on the trapeze. The performance closes with "Fun and Frolic," a pantomime, introducing Frank, Dick and Charley Morosco, James Douglas, Dick Devlin and Annie Braddon. The departure 26 will be Prof. Charles Robertus, destination unknown. On Aug. 28 the Sheridan Bros. open, and on Sept. 4 Fred A. Harris, Fanny Florence, Tom Warfield and Chas. W. Young.....The only new appearances at El Dorado are the Davenport Brothers, skillful and daring acrobats, who close on the 26th to join Castello's Circus. The departures on the 26th will be Billy Maloney and Mabel Gray, destination unknown. To open on the 28th: Boyd and Sarnfield. Biz good.....The Loewen Garden opened last week with English-speaking performers under the management of Sidney A. Vance. The company consists of Erba Robeson, a pleasing balladist; Clara Sidelle, a clever male impersonator and change-artist, who has taken well; the Lynn Sisters, song-and-dance; Emma Evans, jiggist; the Lenton Brothers, gymnasts; the Cooper Brothers, good song-and-dance artists; Miss Stanley, a fair soprano, who makes her debut; and Sidney A. Vance, comedian. Business is prosperous.....At Schicking's Variety Hall business is good, and a very pleasing programme is rendered. The only new appearances were the Martinetti Brothers—three in number—gymnasts and pantomimists. All the old company remain except Rosa Lee, who took a benefit on the 24th, which was largely attended. Next week Chas. H. King, who has become quite a favorite in his Dutch specialties, takes a benefit. Underlined for next week: May Antoine, Millie West, and Maggie Le Claire.....The new faces at the Germania have been Alvey, Tommy Dayton, Maud Lemoine and the Simpson Sisters. Martha and Max Mueller close an engagement of four months next Thursday, with a benefit, and go to Pittsburg. Mr. Hoitor, the pianist at this place, leaves on the 31st for New York. Business continues good.....At the Adelphi, John Kelly and Charles Baker opened 21. Ella Warner closed 23 to join Castello's Circus, and Annie Dayton closed 26 and goes to Cleveland. Jessie Stewart, Emma Burnett, Dan Griffin, Tom Cassidy and Tom Adams remain."

THERE WERE NO NEW FACES at Enochs' Varieties, Philadelphia, during the past week, Tim Morris and Ella Heflin being unable to appear on account of sickness. The attendance during the week was unusually large, and better than it has been in any other week since this establishment was first opened. Tom Granger, J. Morrisey and Tom Jefferson closed Aug. 26, the first-named going to Chicago, and the two latter to Wilmington, Del. The matinee performance on the 24th of August, given for the benefit of Miss Amanda Lee, netted about a hundred dollars for that deserving and unfortunate artist—thanks to the liberality of Harry Enochs and numerous volunteers. Tim Morris, Tommy Haywood, Ella Heflin and Lou Howard are announced to open Aug. 28.

THE MISSES SALLIE ELDRIDGE and Jeannette Lewis, in their pleasing specialties, were the new faces at Noonan's Varieties, Philadelphia, during the week ending Aug. 26. Variety performers can always find engagements here, as a card in our advertising columns will show.

AT MILLER'S WINTER GARDEN, Philadelphia, the attendance has been good during the past week, the company remaining unchanged. Will H. Vane, banjoist, opens on August 28. The regular Fall and Winter season will commence Sept. 4. Artists with specialties can find engagements here. James Collins and Miss Martha Wren closed Aug. 26.

MLLE. DUCLOS' TROUPE closed a successful engagement at the Washington Garden, Philadelphia, on the 26th of August. An entirely new programme will be presented this week, with Miss Katie Forrest, Miss Amelia Dean and the Delevantis as the new faces. Business very good during the past week.

THE NUMEROUS minor variety establishments in Philadelphia have been doing an improved business, owing to the cool weather and the increased number of strangers in the city.

VARIETY PERFORMERS are wanted at Enochs' Varieties, Philadelphia, Pa. See advertisement.

BOB MACK, dramatic agent, Cincinnati, O., advertises that he is prepared to negotiate engagements for artists in all branches of the profession.

AMANDA LEE publishes a card thanking all who participated in the benefit given at Enochs' Varieties, Philadelphia, Pa., last week.

VARIETY NEWS up to Aug. 25 from Chicago, Ill., is sent us as follows: "The entertainment at the Adelphi has consisted of a drama, entitled 'Kinla,' a new series of tableaux vivants, the Reynolds Brothers, the St. Felix Troupe, Kitty Alleyne and Carroll and McCarthy in a comical sketch, concluding with James Mace and Steve Taylor in a pugilistic combat. Next (this) week an entire change will be effected. The company will include D. L. Morris, Dutch comedian; Tommy Gray, banjo soloist; Ira Paine, bird-shooter; the Lawrence Children; Madelaine Hardy, vocalist; Sam Martin, one-legged song-and-dance; Carrie Lavarnie, serio-comic; Ala, gymnast; E. Barrett, comedian; O'Donohue, Irish vocalist; Jennie Hughes, serio-comic; and Baker and Doyle, song-and-dance. Manager Haverly is rapidly making engagements with first-class variety attractions, which he will alternate with spectacular and pantomimic entertainments. Owing to extensive alterations and improvements, the Coliseum will not open till Sept. 2. New side galleries are being added, and the whole place redecorated and refurnished. The following is the list of the company so far as made up for the opening: Eloise Allen, balladist; Hawley and Victoria, aerialists; Prof. Emil Goroux and Mme. Adelina, feats of jugglery; Collins and Moore, song-and-dance; John and Lea Peasley, Irish sketches and jig-dancing; Postelle, female impersonator; Ida Carlisle, Phoites, Montague and Kate Harding."

THE THEATRE COMIQUE, Detroit, Mich., was opened for the season Aug. 21. On the opening night the house was crowded, but the attendance dwindled down considerably during the week, the receipts on the 26th of only one-fourth of those of the 21st. We wrote our correspondent on Aug. 26, continuing: "We know of no other reason than that the attractions produced were not so strong as formerly. B. C. Hart is the stage-manager, and gave a fine negro act, 'The Coming Man,' displaying good ability. The D'Alves Sisters sang a duet, accompanying themselves on banjos, and meeting with fair approbation. Dick Mack is a North-of-Ireland artist of the first water. Kitty Hilland was acceptable in her vocalisms. The Bennetts and Eva made a hit in their specialty of 'Kitchen Domestics.' Nellie Heywood was first-class in her jigs. The Big Four-and-a-half(4½)—Searles, Beggs, Hynes and Cummings and Master Haney—did not come up to expectations. Their forte would be unquestionably refined, refined and not so boisterous. The cards of the evening, however, were the Phoites. We had occasion to review them last season, but since then they have changed one performer, the successor being equal to the departed one. The programme closed with the sketch of 'When I Was a Slave.' Billy Sharp is an ordinary utility man, and assisted in the several sketches; Paul Ritter is pianist and leader of orchestra; Max Redslebheimer, treasurer; and Joseph Jamieson, machinist. Friday nights are set apart for lady nights, and Saturday matinees are also established. Closing to-night are the Phoites, for Cincinnati, O.; and coming the 28th are the Norman Brothers, Jenny Nelson, Lettie La Point, and Harry and Shannon. Altogether the Theatre Comique Hall biz is very good. The new ones 21 were Kitty Durand, Chas. Seaman, and E. B. Houghton. The first two we reviewed a few weeks ago. E. B. Houghton exhibits wonderful strength in his flying-ring act. Fred and Annie MacEvoy introduced some of their new specalties, as also did Med West, the trio being favorites. The gallery in this theatre is reserved for ladies, and a large audiance fills it nightly, thus making it one of the quietest variety halls in the city. Closing to-night are Harry Stanwood and Collins and Moore.....At Mozart Hall, on the 21st, came Den Howe as stage-manager Dan Tracy, an excellent Irish comedian; Gus Warren, a fine Dutch comedian; and Annie Clark. Closing to-night is Annie Clark, whilst Lizzie Hasmon and Alice McGowan are announced for 28."

AT SHELBY'S TERRACE THEATRE, Buffalo, N. Y., the Pesaleys, John Cottrell and Mlle. Zittella were the new faces Aug. 21. Departures 26: the Pesaleys to Chicago, and Cottrell to New York. Announced for 28 are Conway and Kerrigan and Kittie Forrest. This will be the closing week of the season. Joe Lang beneaths 31, Dick Gorman 2 Sept. 1, and Harry Williams 3.....At the Centennial there have been no changes in the company. Business fair.

HARRY AND LEONIE MENDEL, in their Dutch specialties, are now performing at the Adelphi Theatre, St. Louis, Mo. They open at Cincinnati, O., Sept. 18, thence to Grand Rapids, Mich., Oct. 2, Cleveland, O., 9, Pittsburg, Pa., Nov. 13. They announce their first open date as Nov. 23.

A CARD from John Tudor, vocalist and comedian, explains the cause of his temporary withdrawal from the stage, and a statement from a physician mentions that his throat affection renders him for a short time totally unfit to sing in public. He is ready to negotiate for dates, to appear in about a week, in his vocal and other specialties.

FIRST-CLASS ARTISTS and combinations can secure dates at the Howard Athenæum, Boston, Mass., by applying to Manager John Stetson, who advertises.

FOSTER AND KENNEDY, Ethiopian and Irish comedians, will be open for engagements after Oct. 2, to appear in their specialties, noticed in their card elsewhere.

THE HOWARD, Boston, Mass., opens Sept. 4, with Gussie Cravton and James Mase, Den Thompson, Samuel Baylis, Louise Franklin, Quilter and Goldrich, Watson and Ellis, Louise Bonnell, Little Todd, Pat Mooney, Murphy and Morton, and on the 11th Tony Pastor's Troupe appears here.

MENDEL AND MANN, Dutch song-and-dance and sketch artists and instrumentalists, are open for engagements and can be addressed care of this office.

NELSON AND BYRNES, Irish song-and-dance artists, open at the Olympic Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., Sept. 4. They can be negotiated with for engagements as per card.

E. S. WASHBURN, the well-known manager, we are happy to state, is improving in health.

FIFTH-AVENUE NOVELTY THEATRE, Pittsburg, Pa., opens for the season Sept. 18. All kinds of first-class attractions are requested to communicate with H. W. Williams as per card.

WM. J. SCANLAN the comedian was the recipient of a gold-headed cane at San Francisco, Cal., Aug. 10. The presentation was made by the Hon. Samuel Wehsal as the representative of the donor, Charles Reed.

THE ADELPHI THEATRE, Albany, N. Y., was opened Aug. 26. The manager is W. B. Roser, who is assisted by John Underhill, treasurer and business man; W. W. Newcomb, stage-manager; H. Freeberthyser, leader of orchestra; John Churchill, machinist; and W. Drown, scenic-artist. The audience was large, and, the company being good, the performance gave entire satisfaction. The entertainment commenced with a minstrel first-part, in which Eugene Hlitz was seen as interlocutor, John Crosher and Mollie De Marr, balladists; Frank Hawley, bones; and the veteran W. W. Newcomb as tambourine. This portion passed off pleasantly, the principal feature being the excellent end biz of Newcomb, who was as quaint and humorous as of yore. The olio introduced the Twin Sisters French, who performed songs-and-dances gracefully, and later gave a clog dance, remarkable for good time and execution. Morgan and Welch appeared in an Irish sketch which created a deal of laughter, John Crosher sang sensational songs, Eugene Hlitz gave his clever Punch-and-Judy performances, and Hawley and Noon gave songs-and-dances, acquitting themselves creditably. Bertha Rowe sang songs, which were favorably received. Lottie Horton gave a fancy dance, the Clark Brothers performed an act entitled "Hungry Musicians," during the course of which they played upon a variety of musical instruments and met with a good reception. The programme concluded with "The Tobacconist's Daughter," which was acted by Blitz, Morgan, etc. Mlle. Zittella and Emma Rice, billed to appear, failed to do so. Letter of Aug. 27.

THE COMIQUE, St. Louis, Mo., has been favored with a rather share of patronage. The company which appeared on Aug. 20 consisted of Gangero's Japanese Troupe, five in number, Lou Peak, Master Willie Peak, India Woods, Con T. Murphy, Kirk and Drew, Gussie McCain and Burton Stanley. The night of Aug. 27 had been set apart for a benefit to some of the stage hands.....Wm. Smith and Jesse Smith, Alice Langley, Louis Robie and J. E. Carton.

BENNETT AND KERNELL, Ella Mayo, Signor Fabra and Miss Faltony, George France and E. H. Lay are the newcomers to the Olympic Theatre, Brooklyn, L. I., this week.

THERE IS not a particle of truth in the report that Joseph Mortimer is to assume the active management of Fox's American Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa.

NEGRO MINSTRELSY.

CARD.—PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 16, 1876.—EDITOR CLIPPER.—Dear Sir: When my opera-house, Second above Poplar street, this city, was destroyed by fire in 1871, Mr. Forrest, on hearing the facts, sent Mr. McArdle to tell me to call on him. I did so, and while in conversation Mr. Forrest asked me as to my future intentions, etc. At the time I had first-class engagements offered me by Fred Aims and Tony Pastor—hence I was independent. I also had the proffer of the Eleventh-street Opera-house and the services of Moran & Dixey's Minstrels. Forrest was performing at the Walnut-street Theatre at the time, and he said in the evening, in his dressing-room, that he would send me $500, etc. Some days after this, Mr. McArdle asked Forrest if he was going to send me the money he spoke of. Forrest replied, "I have sent it," to the astonishment of McArdle. Palmer, Forrest's dresser, was present. McArdle, however, did not ask him by whom he had sent it. After Forrest's death, McArdle asked me who the party was who brought me the $500. You can imagine my astonishment as well as McArdle's when I tolk him I had never received a penny from Mr. Forrest. He desired me to make inquiry. I have done so, and yet it remains a mystery. Everybody who knew Forrest never knew him to tell a lie—hence it is certain that someone must have got the money and appropriated it to his own use. This notice in your paper may prick the conscience of the party, if he lives, and I may yet receive it. Yours truly, SAM S. SANFORD.

HARRY ROBINSON'S MINSTRELS performed in Bloomington, Ill., Aug. 24, La Salle 25, Ottawa 26, and are billed in Morris 28, El Paso 29, Pontiac 30, Dubuque Sept. 4.

DUPREZ & BENEDICT'S MINSTRELS, including a burlesque opera troupe and a brass band, are reorganizing for the coming season's campaign at Lowell, Mass., at which point all members of the company are requested to report by Sept. 2. A number of performers are advertised for in Manager Duprez's card, to which T. C. Hedges' attention is referred.

CARNCROSS & DIXEY'S MINSTRELS will commence their Fall and Winter season at the Eleventh-street Opera-house, Philadelphia, on the 4th of September. Their company includes the following artists: Cheevers and Kennedy, Weslyn and Casey, Western and Walling, Hughey Dougherty, Matt Wheeler, Eugene Allen, John L. Carncross, E. F. Dixey, Harry Brown, George Frothingham, C. Templeton, Frank Cushman, James Quinn, L. O. Mettler, Samuel Hosfeld, George Armstrong, George Charles, H. Hosfeld, J. Armstrong, F. Campbell, R. Buckholtz, W. Streeland, John E. Unsworth and D. Bradford.

SIMMONS, SLOCUM & SWEATNAM'S MINSTRELS open the Arch-street Opera-house, Philadelphia, on the 28th of August, with the following company: Lew Simmons, E. N. Slocum, Billy Sweatnam, George Thatcher, Charley Reynolds, Welch Ransone, Charley Walz, Bernarde, the Welling Brothers, George W. Harley, Charles F. Shattuck, Eddie Fox, R. Frank Cardella, J. H. Beck, John S. Paul, Edward Garlet and Adam Flach.

AT HAVERLY'S THEATRE, Chicago, Ill., the California Minstrels have given a brilliant programme, consisting of a fine first-part, rendered by W. H. Tilla, Ben Cotton, Billy Emerson, C. S. Fredericks, J. G. Russell and Morrison's orchestra, concluding with the descriptive finale of "The Old Cabin Home," by Macklin and Wilson and Cotton and Emerson. In the second-part Schoolcraft and Coes gave "Mrs. Dittimus' Party;" Billy Emerson, "Pretty as a Picture;" Ernest Linden, female impersonations; Macklin and Wilson, "Wash Day;" Sanford, Wilson and Fredericks were seen as "The Musical Tramps," concluding with the principal members of the company in "The Colored Conductors." No new people next (this) week, but an entire change of bill.....At Hooley's New Chicago Theatre, Hooley's Minstrels have presented a fresh and attractive bill. This party is particularly strong in its musical element, Manager Hooley taking great pains with his first-part. George Knight's descriptive finale, "One Hundred Years Ago," introducing the twenty singing children in Continent al uniforms, with dialogues and patriotic songs by the company and marches by the miniature army, has made a decided hit. The second-part included Conway and Kerrigan in Scotch and Irish bagpipe solos, jigs, and reels; Fayette Welch in "The Last Sensation;" John Hart's sketch "Three A. M.;" Knight in German specialties; Johnson and Bruno in "Look to the West;" and for the wind-up "The Coming Man." For next (this) week an entire change will be given, except that Knight's "One Hundred Years Ago" will be continued. No new people here. Letter of Aug. 25.

BOB HEIGHT, who during the past three years has been a member of Sam Hague's Minstrel Company in Liverpool, Eng., sailed from there Aug 23, and he informs us that he will spend the Winter visiting his friends in America, and will return to England April 30, 1877. FOREIGN SHOW NEWS.

DRAMATIC.

"FALSELY ACCUSED" is the title of a new drama, by Mr. Griffiths, which was first performed at the Britannia Theatre, London, Eng., on Monday evening, Aug. 7. The plot is as follows: One Michael Dubois is a farmer and under-steward to Count De Breval, and on a certain day gathers a large sum of money for his master. The steward of the Count D'Espion, a thorough rascal, professes great friendship for Dubois, but, having fallen desperately in love with the wife of Dubois, Madeline, who scorns him, no means are left untried to ruin Dubois. Drink is tried successfully, and although the understeward has given into his charge the sum collected at the fitting time is ended; but Dubois has been seen drunk and in questionable company. Dubois is falsely accused and sent to prison, while his little boy is given in charge of a certain abbe to bring up. Several years elapse between the acts, during which time many changes are taken place, and we now see Dubois and D'Espion republican leaders, who have sworn hatred to all aristocrats. The Count and his daughter have been forced to leave their castle, and are trying their best to escape from the country. Dubois, hearing of their antecedents, and believing him the cause of his imprisonment, determines to hunt him down, while D'Espion, in order to gain a large sum of money, etc., which he knows he possesses, also tries his best to hand the Count over to the authorities. A friend, however, appears in Lucien, who proves to be the son of Dubois. The Count is sorely beset, but, through all his difficulties, Lucien is at hand to aid him in his escape, and finally Dubois is taken by Dubois, who believes him to be a spy, and takes up his gun to shoot him. Madeline, however, who has taken great interest in the young man, aids him in his escape. Lucien drops a pocketbook in the struggle, and the deception of the escape is made known. Affairs are now soon settled. D'Espion, having obtained possession of the treasure, makes his escape from the window, from which he falls, and eventually dies, but are the rascal does so he explains all his rascally transactions. The Count regains his property, bestows his daughter on Lucien, and Dubois is satisfied.

"DEATH BY LAW," a drama from the pen of E. Towers, was performed for the first time at the Pavilion Theatre, London, Eng., on Monday evening, Aug. 11. The action of the piece takes place abroad, where one Count Rudiger appears to have everything his own way. This prince is a disgrace to society, and his cruelty has gained him many enemies, although he is feared. Rudiger has his heart touched by the handsome Alexina, and wishes to marry her. This is out of all question, for Alexina has fallen in love with Ivan the serf. The pair are discovered in their lovemaking by the Count, who, finding Ivan has seduced the girl, at once gives orders that she shall be instantly married to the serf, which happy result soon takes place. On the bridal party's return to the castle wine is ordered, and, when healths are being proposed, the Count proposes that Ivan drink, and the latter, in revenge, has prompted him to allow the marriage to take place. Ivan is nothing more or less than his serf. A bad time now awaits Ivan, who is obliged to degrade himself before his wife to gratify the callousness of the Count, who may one day lay claim to the property. The knaves know who the son is, and follow him to the Crimea, where in the trenches before Sebastopol they contrive to steal some documents which prove his identity, and substitute other papers, which are in reality plans of the Russian fortifications. The Colonel is suspicious of Paul, who through his bravery has been immediately promoted, and he is placed under arrest. The proofs of his guilt are too clear, and a dishonorable death seems to be in store for him, when the Countess comes, and at once recognizes the Colonel as her long-lost and still beloved English husband. She reveals the fact that Paul is her son, and here the situation becomes really impressive and powerful. The Colonel relents so far as to allow him to join a forlorn hope, and the dramatic interest of "Neck or Nothing" increases wonderfully. The young man accepts his doom, and the attack is made. He falls, as we are led to suppose; but he falls gloriously, with the Russian colors in his hand and the name of his beloved one upon his lips. If all the play had been equal to this, our praise would have been unstinted. The scene only required the presence of a few soldiers to give it reality, and it would have been in some respects the best situation Messrs. Conquest and Pettitt have contrived. The misfortune was that at this point everybody saw how it was going to end. They knew well enough that the hero would come to life again; that the villainy of the rascally contractors would be found out, and virtue rewarded and vice punished as it deserved to be; but they did not know what a tremendous sensation scene Messrs. Conquest and Pettitt had in store for them. The English had planted their standard on the forts of Sebastopol, and the chief characters are seen in an old battery. Monsieur Alphonse Grenouille, defeated in every attempt to ruin the hero, defeated also in making love to Nadine, determines upon vengeance, and sets the old battery on fire. It is undermined, and while a terrible struggle takes place between the parties it is blown up; but the chief characters, of course, escape unhurt, and the treacherous Frenchman gets his quietus from an British bullet. This sensation scene was greeted with roars of applause. Everybody was on tip-toe to watch the struggle; and when at last, after a most exciting scene, the denouement came, the audience made the house ring with their vehement applause. The principal performers were recalled, and then Mr. Pettitt, and the success of the play was assured.

MISS MAGGIE MOORE and J. C. Williamson are at the Royal Adelphi Theatre, London, appearing in "Struck Oil," in which we are informed they were at date of advices, Aug. 10, playing to the best business in the city.

CAUTION TO MUSICIANS.
At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the San Francisco Musical Protective Association the following preamble and resolution were adopted, and ordered to be published in THE NEW YORK CLIPPER, as a caution to members of the musical profession who may contemplate going to California to engage in their profession:
WHEREAS, by reason of the large number of professional musicians now in California, it is difficult for many to get employment at any price, and great hardship and distress are thereby entailed, especially upon musicians newly arrived from the Eastern States, many of whom cannot obtain even the necessaries of life, or the means to return to their former homes, in the exercise of their profession;
THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, That this Association use every effort, through its members and otherwise, to notify musicians in other States of the difficulty they will find in obtaining employment in California, and that all musicians are hereby warned that they run a risk of much loss by enforced idleness in coming to the Pacific Coast.

NOTICE TO MANAGERS.
In consequence of the temporary loss of my voice and severe indisposition while engaged at the Eagle Theatre, New York, I have been advised to place myself under medical treatment for a week or ten days, after which I shall be at liberty to accept engagements. The following medical certificate will explain the cause of my sudden and temporary withdrawal from the stage:
NEW YORK, Aug. 23, 1876.—I certify that JOHN TUDOR has inflammation of the throat, attended with great irritation, that renders him totally unfit to sing in public.
A. G. HULL, M. D.,
140 West Forty-second street.
I have lots of new songs and other business never before introduced into this country.

GRAND SUCCESS OF THE PHOITES.
See What the Press Says:
The Adelphi Theatre last evening was again well attended. The Phoites were received with thunders of applause, and pronounced without an equal, in their specialties, in this country.—TOLEDO BEE, Aug. 16.
THEATRE COMIQUE.—The Fall and Winter season opened last evening. The house was crowded from parquet to gallery, and the performance gave excellent satisfaction. The principal attractions of the week are the "Phoites," whose grotesque dancing, and still more grotesque make-up, surpass even the performances of the famous Majilions. The "Phoites" are three in number, all possessing remarkable elasticity of limb, and their eccentricities are deliciously absurd.—DETROIT DAILY POST, Aug. 22.
THEATRE COMIQUE.—The regular season of 1876-7 began last evening. The Comique was crowded from orchestra to gallery, and an excellent bill was presented. The chief attraction consists of the Phoites, a trio of grotesque dancers and acrobats, whose performances resemble those of the Majilions. The business of the Phoites, however, is much more elaborate than that of any of their rivals. For at least half an hour last night they kept the audience in a constant convulsion of merriment, and were recalled again and again.—DETROIT FREE PRESS, Aug. 22.
Cincinnati Aug. 28, Indianapolis Sept. 4, Col. Sinn's Olympic, New York, Sept. 25. Then with BILLY PASTOR'S TROUPE for the season. 23-1
